1. ——— Effect of repeal of Civil Procedure Code, 1859.—General Clauses Consolidation Act, I of 1868, s. 6.—"Proceedings."—"Procedure."—In all suits instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, in which an appeal lay to the High Court under Act VIII of 1859, an appeal still lies notwithstanding the repeal of that Act by Act X of 1877. Per GARTH, C. J.—A suit is a "judicial proceeding," and the words "any proceedings" in section 6 of Act I of 1868 include all proceedings in a suit from the date of its institution to its final disposal, and therefore include proceedings in appeal. The word "procedure" in section 3, Act X of 1877, has not the same meaning as the word "proceedings" in the above-mentioned section. The proceedings in a suit instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, including a special appeal if the old Code allowed one, go on to the end of the suit notwithstanding the repeal of the old Code. The "procedure"—that is to say, the machinery by which those proceedings are conducted—is, after decree, to be that provided by the new Code. RUNJIT SINGH v. MEHERBAN KOER

2. ——— Suit instituted before, but appeal brought after, repeal of Act VIII of 1859.—Effect of repeal.—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 556, 558, and 588.—Appeal.—Where a suit had been instituted under Act VIII of 1859, but decided at a time when Act X of 1877 had come into operation, and an appeal was presented against such decision, section 3 of Act X of 1877 distinctly indicates that such an appeal is to be governed by the law of procedure in force at the date of the presentation of the appeal. Where, therefore, an appeal presented when Act X of 1877 was in force, has been dismissed under section 556 of that Act, the appellant may apply for its re-admission under section 558; and if such re-admission is refused, he is entitled to an appeal under section 588 (v). 3. ——— Decree, Meaning of.—The effect of the proviso to section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 taken in connection with the definition of the word "decree" in section 2 is, that in all suits pending when that Code came into force, the practice and procedure to be followed down to the final result of such suits (i.e., when nothing remains to be done but to execute the decree or to appeal from it) are the same as previously existed, but that in all subsequent proceedings in execution of the decree, or in appeal from it, the practice and procedure provided by the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 are to be observed. The word "decree" in section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1877, means an order final in its nature, and does not include an interlocutory order, such as an order of reference to take accounts, although such order may, in general, be properly termed a "decree," and, therefore, a suit which has been referred by the

4. ——— Effect of change of law on proceedings already commenced.—Attachment.—Enforcement of decree.—Political pension.— On the 28th of September 1877,—i.e., three days before the new Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) came into operation,—an application was made for the enforcement of a money decree by attachment (inter alia) of a political pension enjoyed by the defendants. Under section 216 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859) a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed, at which date the new Code had come into force, and contended that under section 266, clause (g), of the new Code, the pension was no longer attachable. Held, that all proceedings commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law were, under the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), section 6, to be governed by the Code theretofore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by sections 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877; and that a bonâ fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment. 5. ——— Effect of repeal of Civil Procedure Code, 1877.—Proceedings commenced before repeal.—Clause 3 of section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) provides that nothing in that Code shall apply to any proceedings after decree that had been commenced and were still pending on the 1st June 1882. In case of any question connected with proceedings commenced prior to that date, the applicability of the Code of 1882 depends on whether the new proceeding subsequent to that date, out of which the question has immediately arisen, is so intimately connected with the proceedings prior to that date as to be regarded as part of them. A decree was passed in 1870 by which the suit was referred to the Commissioner to take accounts. On the 21st June 1882, the Commissioner, in the course of taking the said accounts, issued a warrant ordering the defendants to show cause why they should not give inspection of certain books. Held, that the question as to inspection was so intimately connected with the taking of the accounts that it should be regarded as part of the same proceedings, and as these had commenced and were still pending on the 1st June 1882, the question whether the order refusing inspection was appealable or not, was (under section 3 of Act XIV of 1882) to be determined by the Civil Procedure Code (Act

——— ss. 98, 99.—Application that appellant be required to give security.—Order directing appellant to show cause.—Absence of counsel to support application.—Dismissal of application.—Application to restore case to register.—Civil Procedure Code, s. 647.—A petition was made under section 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, praying that an appellant might be required to give security for the costs of the appeal. The ground upon which the petition was based was that the appellant was not pecuniarily in a position to pay the costs of the appeal if it should be dismissed. An order was passed directing the appellant to show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. When the petition came on for hearing, no one appeared to support it or to show cause against it, and it was accordingly rejected. An application was subsequently made on behalf of the petitioner praying that the case might be restored to the register, on the ground that counsel for the petitioner was absent on the occasion of the hearing for fifteen minutes only, and that, as no one on behalf of the appellant had appeared to show cause, the petition should have been granted, and the absence of petitioner's counsel was immaterial. Held, that the matter was dealt with by section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that section 647 of the Code, prescribing that the procedure laid down for suits should be followed as far as it could be made applicable in proceedings other than suits, made section 99 the rule by which the Court was to be guided. Held, also, that although no general rule could be laid down that the absence of counsel, when a case has been called on, should be treated as by itself a sufficient reason for restoring to the register either a regular suit, or an appeal, or a miscellaneous application, but each case of the kind must be dealt with according to its own particular circumstances, in the present case, taking the circumstances into consideration, an absence of counsel for fifteen minutes was not enough to preclude the Court from restoring the petition to the register. It is not necessary, before proceeding to hear and determine a suit ex parte under section 100, that all the process prescribed by law for compelling the attendance of the defendant as witness should be exhausted. It is sufficient that due service of the summons upon the defendant is proved. 19. ——— Suit, Adjournment of hearing of.—"Appearance" of defendant.—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 108, 157.—A Munsif, before whom a suit was pending, fixed, by way of adjournment, a particular date for its disposal. Upon the date so fixed, it was necessary to take evidence upon issues of fact which had previously been settled. The plaintiffs appeared on that day. The defendants did not appear, but there was in Court a pleader who had been instructed by the two principal defendants at the outset, and who had filed his vakalutnama. There was nothing to show that he had ever received any other instructions whatever, either as to the facts of the case or the conduct of the defence, or that the defendants had done anything beyond giving the pleader the instructions above referred to. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs gave their evidence and the Munsif decreed the claim. Held that, under the circumstances stated, the defendant's pleader must be taken not to have been in Court on the date fixed, for the purpose of defending the suit on behalf of the defendants, inasmuch as, upon that part of the case, he had not been instructed; that it was therefore a fair inference that the defendants did not appear, and the case was disposed of under section 157 of the Civil Procedure Code; and that, under these circumstances, the provisions of section 108 were applicable, and the decree was an ex parte decision, which it was open to the Munsif to reconsider. Hira Dai v. *Hira Lal, I. This they failed to do on the day to which the hearing was adjourned, and when the suit came on for final hearing they were still in default, and also failed to appear in person or by vakeel. against two different individuals, the Court is not justified in reopening the whole case. Section 119, Act VIII of 1859, does not contemplate the setting aside of that portion of the decree in such a case which refers to the other defendants. The statement was received, and the suit was dismissed in toto. In appeal, the Principal Sudder Ameen reversed that part of the decree which related to K., on the ground that she had presented no petition in conformity with section 119 of the Code. Held, that K. was properly before the Sudder Ameen's Court, and was entitled to the benefit of the order of dismissal, and that the Principal Sudder Ameen went on too narrow a ground, and should have tried the case on its merits. In the absence of good and sufficient cause for previous non-appearance, his application was rejected and an ex parte judgment given against him. After this he applied, at the instance of the Appellate Court, for a re-hearing, on the ground that the summons had not been duly served upon him. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, that although so far as the decrees made A. personally liable the Court had no power to interfere, yet as the infants were not responsible for their non-appearances, it might be said that they had been prevented by "sufficient cause from appearing," and that the decrees might be set aside under section 119 of Act VIII of 1859 (Act X of 1877, section 108) as against them. 38. ——— "Appearance" of defendant under Civil Procedure Code, sections 100, 101.—Ex parte decree.—The first hearing of a suit was fixed for the 12th December 1883, on which day the defendant did not appear, and the case was adjourned to the 18th December, and, as the defendant did not then appear, a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff. A vakalutnama had been previously filed on the defendant's part, and he had also objected to an application filed by the plaintiff for attachment of the defendant's property before judgment. Held, that these acts on the defendant's part did not constitute an "appearance" by him within the meaning of section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code, which referred to an appearance in answer to a summons to appear and answer the claim on a day specified, issued under section 64; that the decree was therefore ex parte within the meaning of sections 100 and 108, and an appeal consequently lay to the High Court under section 588, clause (9), from an order rejecting an application to set the decree aside. Zain-ul-abdin Khan v. *Ahmad Raza Khan, I. decreed ex parte, defendant applied for a revival thereof, under section 119, Code of Civil Procedure. The application having been rejected, defendant appealed, and the first Court was directed to enquire whether there was sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the defendant. This was done, and the defendant was allowed to defend the suit. The plaintiff then appealed to the Judge, who reversed the last order. Both parties then went back to the Munsif, who, on 26th April 1867, recorded a proceeding that the original ex parte order was to stand. In the meantime the defendant appealed to the High Court, which reversed the Judge's order. Held, that the effect of the High Court's order was to render valid the Munsif's order admitting the defendant to defend the suit, and that no application for review was necessary on the part of the defendant. Held, that the High Court's order being a final decision by way of appeal on a question which arose in the suit, could not be interfered with, except by the Privy Council. 3. ——— Admission and rejection of documents.—At the stage of a suit referred to in Act VIII of 1859, sections 128, 129, and 132, the Court ought to sort the documents tendered into two classes: those relevant and admissible, and those irrelevant and inadmissible; and to reject in limine all documents which are evidently such as cannot be used as evidence in the suit. The admission of a document at this stage does not imply that it is evidence, but merely declares that it may, if properly treated, be used as evidence in the suit, and filing it as a part of the record does not confer any authority on such document or operate to dispense with any proof of genuineness. Courts of first instance ought to specify what portions of the documentary evidence on the record they have accepted, and what portions they have refused to listen to. 4. ——— Non-production of evidence at proper time.—The great object of the Procedure Code in requiring a day to be fixed for the hearing of a case and all the evidence to be adduced on that day, is that parties may thus be confronted with each other, and the whole evidence on either side be at one and the same time before the Court. Where a party fails to produce his documents at the proper time, a Court commits no error in law in refusing to send for them subsequently, if not satisfied that they are necessary for the ends of justice. 3. ——— Adjournment for final disposal.—Dismissal of suit after adjournment.—Non-appearance of plaintiff.—In a suit, issues having been settled, the final hearing of the suit was adjourned to a fixed date for final disposal. On that date plaintiff did not appear, and the suit was dismissed under section 148 of Act VIII of 1859. Held that, as this was not a case which had been adjourned in favour of either party to enable him to "produce his proofs or cause the attendance of his witnesses," the order was not one which could properly be made. 4. ——— Dismissal of suit after adjournment.—The first hearing of a suit took place on the 16th November, when issues were settled, and the final hearing of the suit was fixed for the 22nd January following. On the 22nd of January the plaintiff changed her vakeel, and applied by the new vakeel for a summons for a witness, and on the 23rd, the new vakeel stating that owing to the absence of his witnesses he was not prepared to go on with the case, the Judge dismissed the suit. Held that, under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Judge was justified in dismissing the suit. COMALAMMAL v. RANGASAWMY IYENGAR . . 4 Mad., 56

5. ——— The first hearing of a suit was fixed for the 10th July 1867. Neither of the parties nor their vakeels appeared. Thereupon the Court dismissed the suit under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, but afterwards, upon the application of the plaintiff's vakeel, restored it to the file for hearing, under section 119. Plaintiff obtained further adjournments to produce witnesses, the last being an adjournment to the 28th September. On that day the vakeels of both parties appeared, but no witnesses, and the Court again dismissed the suit under section 148, for failure to produce witnesses. On the 22nd of October the suit was again, under section 119, restored to the file on the application of the plaintiff's vakeel, and a decision was afterwards come to for the plaintiff upon the merits. On appeal the last-mentioned decree was reversed, and the decree passed under section 148 (whether the first or second decree was not specified) upheld, upon the ground that, as section 119 was inapplicable to a decree passed under section 148, the Court of first instance had acted without jurisdiction in restoring the suit to the file. Held, on special appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court, that the first decree of dismissal being a decree which might have been made under section 147, was one to which section 119 might be applied. That the second decree of dismissal was one to which section 148 alone applied, consequently one subject only to review or to an appeal, and the proceeding had in October 1867 being substantially an application for review, was one which the Court had power to grant. 6. ——— Refusal to allow examination of defendant as a witness.—Dismissal in default of other evidence.—The Court of first instance refused to grant plaintiff's application to be allowed to examine second defendant as a witness on her behalf, thinking the grounds of such application insufficient for the exercise of its discretion under section 162 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the adjourned date of hearing, plaintiff failed to produce any other witness, and the suit was dismissed under section 148. On regular appeal, the Civil Judge considered that the Court of first instance ought not to have refused plaintiff's application, but held that the refusal was a final order not open to question in appeal. On special appeal,—Held, that the Civil Judge was wrong on the latter point; that if the plaintiff had been prevented from examining the second defendant on sufficient grounds, she had not committed default under section 148; that the decree on the finding of the Civil Court was not maintainable without enabling plaintiff to examine second defendant; and that that finding was conclusive in the special appeal. The decrees of both the lower Courts were consequently set aside and the case remanded. LATCHMANA RAU SAIB v. ROGUNATHA RAU [6 Mad., 299

7. ——— Dismissal of suit for non-attendance of witnesses.—The plaintiff, upon whose application the Court of first instance adjourned the hearing of the suit, failed to cause the attendance of his witnesses on the day fixed for the further hearing, and the Court of first instance threw out the suit, stating that it did so under section 110, Act VIII of 1859. Both parties to the suit were represented on that day by their pleaders. The Court of first instance subsequently entertained and rejected an application under section 119 for a re-hearing. The lower Appellate Court admitted and allowed an appeal against the order of the Court of first instance. Both the orders of the lower Courts were reversed, it being held that the Court of first instance must be regarded as having acted under section 148 of the Code. KASHEE PERSHAD v. DEBI DAS [7 N. There was no order or summons to the first plaintiff to attend to give evidence in this suit, but a summons was issued to the plaintiff to attend to give evidence in another suit to which the second plaintiff was no party, and which was heard together with this appeal. Held (reversing the decision of the Sessions Judge), that non-compliance with the summons to give evidence in the other appeal was not enough to warrant the exercise of the power in this case. 20. ——— Default of plaintiff to appear.—Reasons for summoning witness.—In a suit for the right of pre-emption, on the ground that plaintiff was a shafee khalit, defendant, who alleged that plaintiff was only a benami shareholder, offered to establish his case on the deposition of the plaintiff alone. The latter not appearing on summons, the suit was decreed against him under section 170, Code of Civil Procedure. On this he appealed, and the Judge ordered the Munsif to give him further time to appear. This was granted, and then extended again and again by the Munsif, who, on the plaintiff failing to appear again, gave a decree against him under the same law as before. The case was then appealed to the Judge, who ordered the case to be tried on its merits, remarking that the presence of the plaintiff was not necessary. Held, that as the plaintiff's liability to appear and give evidence had been already determined by a competent Court, and never denied by himself, he could not take advantage of a technical objection to show that he was not bound to come because the formalities of the law had not been observed or his evidence shown to be necessary. 24. ——— Discretion of Court to summon party as witness.—Where the law allows a discretion to any Court, it presumes that such discretion will be soundly and properly exercised; and where it is shown that the discretion was not so exercised, the omission will be a ground for interference by the superior Court. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge's order under section 170 was set aside on the ground that he had not exercised his discretion at all, inasmuch as he had ignored the fact that plaintiff had given very substantial reasons for his inability to attend and give evidence when summoned to do so; and as the Subordinate Judge had held substantially that there was sufficient evidence to prove plaintiff's claim, plaintiff was entitled to a decree, his failure to give evidence notwithstanding. The wording of section 197 is quite consistent with the view that, where a decree for possession is given, and an enquiry as to the amount of mesne profits is reserved, the decree for possession of the land is only a partial decree in the suit, and that there is to be a further enquiry and a further decree in respect of mesne profits. At the time this application was made more than twelve years had elapsed from the date of the decree. Held by STRAIGHT, BRODHURST, and TYRRELL, JJ., that the application might be granted, it being the first made under section 230 of Act XIV of 1882, and the first made after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree, and not being barred by the last paragraph of section 230 of that Act, read in conjunction with the third paragraph of section 230 of Act X of 1877, the "law in force" mentioned in the last paragraph of section 230 of Act XIV of 1882 referring to the law of limitation in force at the time the Act was passed, and not to the third paragraph of section 230 of Act X of 1877. Held by STUART, C. J., and OLDFIELD, J., that the application should not be granted, the effect of the last paragraph of section 230 of Act XIV of 1882 being to bar any proceedings to enforce a decree under that Act which would have been barred under section 230 of Act X of 1877, if taken thereunder, on the ground that the period of twelve years had elapsed from the dates specified in that section. This order was reversed on appeal, and the case was sent back for disposal on its merits. The Judge then held that Act X of 1877, which had just come into force, applied, and, on the ground that the decree-holder had failed to get execution upon his former application, dismissed the petition. The Judge referred the case to ths High Court upon the question whether he was, under the circumstances, at liberty to grant the application. Held that he was. 9. ——— Effect of striking off execution proceedings.—Procedure.—A decree was obtained on the 10th July 1858, and applications to execute it were made in June 1862 and January 1866. The last application prior to the coming into operation of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 was on the 10th January 1876. This proceeding was struck off. The decree-holder on the 13th June 1879 again applied for execution; the decree was transferred to S. for execution, where, on objection that it was more than twelve years old, and therefore barred by section 230 of Act X of 1877, the execution proceedings were again struck off on the 17th January 1880. This order was appealed against, and eventually, on the 25th April 1881, the application was re-admitted. In June 1881 an application was made to the S. Court for transfer of the case for execution to D., which was granted, and the case transferred; but no steps having been taken by the decree-holder in the D. Court, it was struck off by that Court on the 19th August 1881. On the 4th March 1882 (the judgment-debtor having died meanwhile), an application was made to the D. Court to restore the proceedings for execution against his representative. Notices were issued, and the 2nd June was eventually fixed for the hearing. On that day no one was present on behalf of the decree-holder (whose pleader had died in the meantime), and the case was again struck off. On the 11th July 1882, application was made to restore the proceedings, notices were issued, and a day fixed for hearing, and after numerous adjournments the objections of the judgment-debtor were overruled on the 5th March 1883, and execution of the decree granted. On appeal, the Judge found that the execution proceedings had been continuous throughout, and that there had been no unreasonable delay in the prosecution of the execution proceedings. Held, that execution of the decree was not barred by section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This policy is to prevent a sudden disturbance of existing rights in consequence of new legislation; but it is beyond its object and scope to revive rights or remedies which have already expired before the new Act comes into operation, and although the Legislature may revive such rights or remedies, it can only do so by express words to that effect. It was objected that the proceedings upon the applications of the 31st December 1880 and 3rd June 1879 were barred under section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, that these proceedings were not barred, inasmuch as the previous application had not been made under section 230 of the Code. Anandrav Chimuji Avati v. *Thakar Chand, I. The Court, in accordance with section 232 of Act X of 1877, directed notice of the transferee's application to be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor. The transferee failed to pay the Court-fee leviable for the issue of such notice, and the Court dismissed his application. The transferee subsequently made a second application to be allowed to execute the decree. Held, that such application could not be rejected, with reference to section 230 of Act X of 1877, on the ground that due diligence had not been used on the former application to procure complete satisfaction of the decree, because such application had not been granted; and, therefore, the question whether "on the last preceding application" due diligence was used to procure such satisfaction did not arise. 19. ——— Passing of the Act.—Meaning of the expression "granted" in s. 230. —Under section 230 of Act X of 1877, an application for execution is said to be "granted" when it is made regularly and formally. The expression "granted" is equivalent to the expression "admitted" as used in section 245. [I. L. R., 8 Calc., 297: 10 C. L. R., 111

20. ——— Meaning of "granted."—Under section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, after a decree is twelve years old, there is a prohibition against its being executed more than once,—i.e., an application for execution should not be granted if a previous application has been allowed under the provisions of that section. The mere filing of a petition with the result that the application contained in it is subsequently struck off, is not "granting" an application within the meaning of section 230 of the Code; and sections 245, 248, and 249 show that there is a broad distinction between admitting an application for the purpose of issuing notice to the other side and of hearing the objections that may be urged, and a decision of the Court as provided in section 249. In 1865 a decree was passed for a sum of money payable by yearly instalments for a period of sixteen years. Down to March 1877, various amounts were paid on account of the decree. In that month an application was made for execution of the decree, the result being an arrangement for liquidation of the amount then due, which was confirmed by the Court. A second application for execution was made on the 9th March 1881, the decree then being more than twelve years old. All that was done with reference to this application was that notice to appear was issued to the judgment-debtor's representatives, and subsequently a petition was filed notifying that an arrangement had been effected, under which a certain sum had been paid by one of the said representatives in satisfaction of the claim against him, and that the other had agreed to pay the balance by yearly instalments. Upon this the application for execution was struck off. On the 5th March 1883, another application for execution was made, notice to appear was issued, and after this notice a petition was put in intimating that an arrangement had been come to, and praying that execution might be postponed, whereupon the application was struck off. Again, on the 31st March 1884, the decree-holder applied once more for execution of the decree. Held, that neither the previous application of the 9th March 1881, nor that of the 5th March 1883, could properly be said to have been "granted" within the meaning of section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, under these circumstances, the decree, though twelve years old and upwards, was not barred by that section, and the application for execution should be allowed. 21. ——— Twelve years' old decree.—Meaning of "granted."—A decree passed in April 1872 was kept alive by various applications for execution up to 1883. In February and December of that year two such applications were made, but the proceedings on both occasions terminated in the applications being struck off without any money being realised under the decree. In November 1884, the decree-holder again applied for execution, the application being the first made after the decree had become twelve years old, and being made within three years from the passing of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. Held, that the application must be entertained in accordance with the ruling of the Full Bench in Musharraf Begum v. *Ghalib Ali, I. 23. ——— Second application for execution of decree.—Failure to satisfy decree on first application.—In execution of a decree passed more than twelve years before the date of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), certain judgment-creditors applied for the attachment and sale of certain specified property belonging to their judgment-debtor, previous to the date on which the three years allowed for such execution, under section 230, would have expired. Subsequently, after the three years had elapsed, they filed a fresh application, praying that certain other property of their judgment-debtor might be attached and sold in lieu of that specified in their former application, and that the latter might be released. Held, that execution of the decree was barred by limitation. Per PRINSEP, J.—Under section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was intended by the Legislature that a decree-holder seeking to execute a decree passed more than twelve years before should have one opportunity to execute that decree, and that if he fails to satisfy it on that application, any further application becomes barred. 24. ——— Finality of order made in execution proceedings.—Decree payable by instalments.—In 1868 a decree was obtained for R1,100, which provided that the amount should be paid in instalments, the first instalment being R200, to be paid at the end of the first year, and that the other instalments should be R100 at the end of each subsequent year, and that in the event of failure to carry this out, and 2½ months after the falling due of the instalment, the whole amount should be exigible in a lump sum with interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem. In 1877 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, asserting that R600 had been paid up to that time by five instalments, one of R200 and four of R100 each, and that default had been made in payment of the fifth instalment of R100, and he asked to recover the whole amount due on the decree. No order was passed on this application, and eventually the case was struck off. In 1880 the decree-holder again applied for execution of the decree, upon the same grounds as those upon which the previous application was based. Notice was issued and served, and a warrant issued for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, but eventually the case was struck off. In 1883 the decree-holder on the same grounds made another application for execution. It was contended by the judgment-debtor that execution was barred by section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as no instalments had been paid, and even if they had been paid, they could not be recognised, not having been certified. Held, that the proper time from which to reckon the limitation of twelve years was the fifth year from the date of the bond, the whole claim from the beginning and the order passed in 1880 having gone upon that basis, that the Court could not go behind that order, and that consequently the decree-holder was within time and might take out execution. 25. ——— Interlocutory decree.—A decree for possession and wasilat having been made in 1854, it was, by an order in January 1881, directed upon the report of an Ameen that the decree-holder should recover a particular sum for wasilat. On the 14th March 1881 the decree-holder filed a petition praying that certain properties of the debtor might be attached and sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the wasilat. Held that, under section 230 of Act X of 1877, the application of 14th March 1881 was not barred. The decree of 1854, so far as the wasilat was concerned, might be taken to be merely interlocutory, and did not become final until January 1881. BARODA SUNDARI DABIA v. FERGUSSON.

27. ——— Obstruction to execution of decree.—Fraud.—The respondent, as plaintiff in a Small Cause suit in 1867, obtained a decree against the husband of the petitioner, since deceased. The decree was kept alive till 13th December 1876, when the decree-holder brought a suit to set aside certain alienations made by the judgment-debtor and alleged to be fictitious and fraudulent. Having succeeded in the suit and in rendering the property alienated available for attachment under his decree, the respondent again applied for execution in 1879, but not against the property fictitiously alienated. Lastly, the respondent applied, on September 28th, 1880—more than twelve years after decree—for execution against certain immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, other than the property fictitiously alienated, in the petitioner's possession. Held that, having regard to the fraud of the judgment-debtor, the application was not barred by section 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Subsequently, the decree-holder having attempted to execute the decree against the share so purchased, the appellant, in order to protect the share which he had bought, purchased the decree himself and proceeded to execute it against the remaining share in the hands of the judgment-debtors. Held that the appellant, as the transferee of the original decree-holder, was entitled to execute the decree personally against the judgment-debtors, and also, in the event of their making default in paying the amount due under the decree, to proceed against the share of the mehal still in their hands; and, further, that if by reason of it being necessary to sell the remaining share of the judgment-debtors any equity should arise between them and the appellant to have the decretal money distributed over the whole property mentioned by the decree, that equity must be enforced by an independent suit. 13. ——— Application of transferee of decree for execution disallowed.—Suit by transferee for decretal amount.—Declaratory decree.—The transferee of a decree for costs, associating with him the transferor, made an application under section 232 of the Civil Procedure Code to be allowed to execute the decree. The application was opposed by the judgment-debtor and was rejected, and the Court referred the transferee to a regular suit. After taking various proceedings ineffectually, he instituted a suit for the recovery of the sum to which he was entitled as costs under the decree transferred to him. Held that the plaintiff, as the holder of the decree by assignment, could only recover the amount under it by executing the decree, and not by a separate suit; but that he was entitled to have a decree declaring that the assignment to him of the decree-holder's rights under the decree was valid, and gave him a right to execute it, and that the Court's order under section 232 which disallowed the execution was an improper one, a suit for this relief being maintainable; for, there being no appeal from orders under section 232, there would otherwise be no remedy; and that, looking at the plaint and the issues on which the parties were divided, and the fact that the Court which refused the plaintiff's application for execution, referred him to a regular suit, this relief might properly be given in the present suit. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the suit was maintainable, inasmuch as the present plaintiff never having been accepted on the record as holder of the decree, the questions which were disposed of by the Court executing the decree, as between the plaintiff and the judgment-debtor, could not be regarded as questions within section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. 1. QUESTIONS IN EXECUTION OF DECREE.

1. ——— Question raised for first time in execution.—Held, that a question raised for the first time between the parties to a decree at the time of its execution, although not expressly reserved in that decree for determination at the time of its execution, may be enquired into and determined by the Court executing the decree under section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. JANOJI BANAJI v. VYANKATESH SHRINIVAS
[2 Bom., 393: 2nd Ed., 371

2. ——— Decree subsequently modified, Question as to execution of.—Where it is contended that the decree that has been executed is not the decree that was passed between the parties, but a decree modified by a subsequent decretal order, section 11, Act XXIII of 1861, does not apply, the question not being one relating to the execution of the decree and between the parties to the suit. 3. ——— Suit to enforce liability imposed by decree of Civil Court in mofussil.—A suit does not lie to enforce a liability specifically imposed by the decree of a Civil Court in the mofussil, the right of suit in such case being taken away by section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. SANJEEVIYAH v. NANJIYAH . . . 4 Mad., 453

4. ——— Transfer of decree for execution.—Procedure of Court passing and Court executing transferred decree.—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 243, 545.—The provisions of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code govern equally the procedure of the Court which passed the decree, when executing such decree, and the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. Cooke v. *Hiseeba Beebee, 6 N. 5. ——— Question after Court has executed decree and become functus officio.—Review.—Where a judgment-debtor, pending the execution proceedings, was granted permission to examine the state of the accounts, but failed to do so, and then made a fresh application to the Court for the same purpose after the execution proceedings had been struck off, and the decree declared to be satisfied,—Held, that the question must be determined with reference to the provisions of section 647 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the only course open to the judgment-debtor would have been to apply for a review of the order which declared the decree to be satisfied and struck off the execution proceedings. Held, also, that the words, "the following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree," of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, must be interpreted to mean the Court executing the decree at the time when the application is made, and that they do not include the Court which has executed the decree, and has, therefore, become functus officio. FAKARUDDIN MAHOMED AHSAN v. THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL

6. ——— Loss or destruction of decree.—Regular suit.—A decree passed for money was lost or destroyed: the decree-holder on suing out execution was referred to a regular suit. Held, that the existence of the decree and of its terms might have been enquired into in the execution department, and that the order of the Court, to which application for execution was made, could not confer jurisdiction on a Court to entertain such a suit. 8. ——— Question of title between decree-holder and third person.—Separate suit.—The plaintiffs in a suit for money obtained a decree against all the defendants except P., and among them K. On appeal, the Court of first appeal gave them a decree against P. In execution of this decree they attached and were paid, as belonging to P., certain money deposited in the Government Treasury in K.'s name. On appeal by P., the Court of second appeal reversed this decree, and restored the decree of the first Court dismissing the suit as regards P. P. thereupon applied in execution of his decree for a refund of the money. The plaintiffs objected on the ground that the money belonged to K. Held, that the Court executing P.'s decree was not competent to decide the question whether the money belonged to P. or to K., such question not being one between P. and them only, but involving and raising a question of title between him and K. as to their conflicting claims, inter se, to the money. The question could only be determined in a regular suit. LUCHMEEPUT SINGH v. ADOYTO CHURN MULLICK. . 24 W. R., 452

10. ——— Question as to whether purchase-money has been paid within time. Conditional decree.—The plaintiff in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption obtained a decree to the effect mentioned in section 214 of the Civil Procedure Code. On payment by him of the purchase-money into Court, the defendants objected, in the execution department, to such payment, on the ground that it had not been made within time. The Court which made the decree disallowed the objection. The defendants appealed from the order disallowing the objection: they had previously appealed from the decree. The Appellate Court heard both appeals together, and holding that the purchase-money had not been paid into Court within time, reversed the decree and allowed the objection. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court from the Appellate Court's decree, which was admitted. He also preferred an appeal from the appellate order allowing the objection, but this appeal was rejected as being beyond time, and such order became final. Held that, inasmuch as the question whether the plaintiff had paid the purchase-money into Court within time was not one relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, but was one which should be decided in the suit itself, and therefore the proceedings in the execution department touching that question were ill-founded, such order was not a bar to the hearing of the second appeal preferred by the plaintiff. 11. ——— Suit to set aside order in execution of decree.—Where the object of the suit was to set aside orders passed in the miscellaneous department relating to execution of decree,—Held, that such suit was untenable; section 11, Act XIII of 1861, having distinctly prohibited all remedy by separate suit, and the remedy provided being an appeal from the order complained of. 15. ——— Liability of son for father's debt.—Suit against son to enforce decree against father.—Limitation.—Suit to recover money charged on land by decree.—A suit for money having been brought against the holder of an impartible zemindari, a decree was passed in 1867 by consent to the effect that the zemindar undertook to pay a certain sum by yearly instalments and hypothecated certain lands as security. A memorandum of this decree was registered under section 42 of Act XX of 1866. The last instalment fell due in February 1870. The decree was kept alive against the zemindar up to his death in 1873. Upon the death of the zemindar, proceedings in execution were taken against his son, who succeeded to the zemindari, but were set aside on appeal. In January 1882 a suit was brought against the son to recover the amount of the last instalment due by his father under the decree of 1867. Held, that the suit was neither barred by the provisions of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor by limitation. 16. ——— Mode of redeeming mortgaged lands in execution of former decree.—A mortgagee was put into possession of the mortgaged property, under a decree obtained by him against the mortgagor, to the effect that the mortgagee should remain in possession until the mortgage debt was paid. The mortgagor subsequently paid into Court the money due under the mortgage decree, and applied to be restored to the possession of the mortgaged property. Both the lower Courts granted the mortgagor's application. On special appeal,—Held (following the decision of the Full Bench in Ravji Shivram Joshi v. Kaluram Malukchand, 12 Bom., 161), that such an application was not the proper mode for the mortgagor to redeem the property and to recover possession from the mortgagee, the previous decree for possession having been fully executed when the mortgagee was put into possession. It was then demanded from the surety; but he objecting, the claimant (P.) was served with notice to produce it. This not having been done within the period fixed, the Munsif ordered that it should be demanded from the surety, and (on his failure to produce its stipulated price) should be realised by attachment and sale of his property. Held that, the decree having been executed, the Munsif's subsequent proceedings as to the elephant were illegal, and that the right to it was open to a suit. 48. ——— Restitution of amount paid under decree.—Reversal of decree.—Interest.—Fresh suit.—In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, a decree was passed for possession by redemption, on the plaintiff paying the sum of R43,625-7-0, the amount of the mortgage-debt. Prior to the institution of the suit, the defendant had taken proceedings in the Judge's Court to foreclose the mortgage, and the plaintiff paid the above-mentioned sum into that Court for the defendant, who took it. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court from the decree directing him to pay R43,625-7-0 as the mortgage-debt, and obtained a decree by which the decree of the first Court was modified, and the amount payable on redemption was reduced to R22,155. The plaintiff then took out execution of the decree to recover from the defendant the difference between the two sums with interest. Held, that the effect of the Appellate Court's decree was to direct restitution of any sum paid under the first Court's decree which was disallowed by the Appellate Court's decree, and that the question was clearly one for determination by the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit, being expressly provided for by section 583 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, also, that the decree-holder was entitled to restitution of the amount with interest. Roger v. *Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, L. Questions that may arise after the sale are not, strictly speaking, questions relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of clause (3), section 244; but as soon as there has been a sale, the execution of the decree, so far as the decree-holder is concerned, is over, and the question whether the purchaser has purchased anything by the sale is not a question as to the execution of the decree-holder's decree. 58. ———— Excess sum retained by decree-holder after satisfying decree.—Separate suit.—Suit brought to recover the amount to which plaintiff was entitled under a decree passed in favour of himself and defendant as co-plaintiffs in a former suit. It appeared that defendant purchased the property sold in execution of the decree, and that the price for which the sale took place was sufficient to satisfy the decree. Instead of paying the purchase-money into Court, defendant, with the knowledge and assent of plaintiff, retained the whole sum upon the understanding that he should give the Court a receipt for himself and on behalf of plaintiff, and afterwards pay to plaintiff his portion of the amount decreed. Accordingly, defendant presented a petition to that effect and obtained a certificate confirming the sale. Defendant having failed to pay plaintiff his portion, the present suit was brought. Upon these facts it was held, in special appeal, that the decree was satisfied by sale of the judgment-debtor's property, and that the execution proceedings were completely at an end, the defendant having been, by the assent of the plaintiff, made his agent for the acknowledgment of the satisfaction of the decree. No subsequent application under the decree could have been entertained by the Court which executed it. Therefore plaintiff's claim was not a matter determinable under section 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. The last paragraph of section 258 means that the Court executing the decree shall not recognise an uncertified payment or adjustment out of Court. It does not prohibit a suit for money paid to a decree-holder out of Court, and the payment of which, not being certified, could not be recognised, and which the decree-holder had not returned, but had misappropriated by taking out execution of the decree a second time and securing the amount in full through the Court. The defendant then applied to the Court of first instance to order restitution of the shares, which had been realised by the plaintiff. Upon being ordered to produce the shares, R. made an application to the Court, professedly under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, in which he alleged that, pending the appeal to the Privy Council, he had transferred the shares to G., his counsel in the case, who had failed to restore them, and he prayed "that the said person might be brought upon the record, and that, execution for recovery of the said shares might be given against him." The Court passed an order upon this application, calling on G. to show cause why he should not be called upon to restore the shares made over to him by R., and he thereupon filed an answer denying that he was the custodian of the shares, and alleging that he was their purchaser for value. The Court passed an order directing that G.'s name should be placed on the record, so that the decree might be executed against him. Held, that the question being one between two judgment-debtors inter se, and not between the parties arrayed against each other as decree-holders of the one part, and judgment-debtors or their representatives on the other, the provisions of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code were not applicable to the case; that G. could not be regarded as a "representative" of R. within the meaning of that section. Prior to sale, the judgment-debtors made an application to be declared insolvents, and obtained an order under Statute 11 and 12 Victoria, Cap. 21, section 7, by which their property was vested in the Official Assignee. An application was then made by the Official Assignee to the Court in which the execution of the decree was pending, for the release of the property from attachment and that the property might be made over to him. The Court dismissed the application. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the first Court's order. Held, that the matter did not come before the Court of first instance under section 49 of Statute 11 and 12 Victoria, Cap. 21, inasmuch as that section refers to cases where the insolvent's schedule has been filed, and to debts or demands admitted therein, and, in the present case, no schedule had been filed at the time of the Official Assignee's application; and the Court could therefore only entertain the application under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees. Held, that the Official Assignee could not be held to be a representative of the judgment-debtors within the meaning of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and his application was not one relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. Held, that the Court of first instance had only jurisdiction in the matter under section 278 of the Code, and disposed of it under that section, and that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. person who succeeds to the right of any of the parties to the suit after the decree is passed. A Hindu widow mortgaged certain properties, and afterwards by an ikrarnamah made them over to B., the next heir. The ikrarnamah contained a condition that B. was to be liable for the widow's debts. Subsequently the mortgagee brought a suit against the widow on the mortgage and joined B. as a party, on the ground that he was in possession of the mortgaged properties. That suit resulted in a money decree being passed on appeal by the High Court against the widow personally, the property in the hands of B. being held not to be liable. The case was taken on appeal to the Privy Council, and pending the hearing of that appeal the widow died, and B. was brought on the record as her legal representative. The decree of the High Court was ultimately confirmed by the Privy Council. In execution of the decree it was sought to make B. liable to satisfy the amount out of the properties which he had obtained under the ikrarnamah, the mortgagee not having been aware of the conditions of that document before the decree of the High Court. Held that, so far as these properties were concerned, he was not the legal representative of the widow, as he inherited them as heir-at-law of her husband, and that his title to them under the ikrarnamah was not that of a "representative" within the meaning of clause (c) of section 244. Held, further, that the question of B.'s liability under the ikrarnamah did not fall within the scope of the provisions of clause (c) of section 244, as being a question to be decided between the "parties" to the suit, as although B. was a party to the suit, the only claim against him was that the property in his hands was liable, as having been previously hypothecated; and as the suit was dismissed so far as that claim was concerned, it was not a question relating to the execution of the decree. To this B. objected under section 281 of the Civil Procedure Code, claiming to be the owner of the shares in question. Before the hearing of her objection she died, and L. applied to have his name brought upon the record in her place for the purpose of supporting the objections. An order having been passed disallowing the objections which had been filed by B., L. appealed to the High Court. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the decree-holder to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that as the first Court's order related to L.'s claim as the heir of B. to have the shares entered in her name released from attachment, it must be regarded as passed under section 281 of the Civil Procedure Code, and as conclusive, subject to L.'s bringing a suit to establish his right. On the other side it was contended that L. being the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor K., the first Court's order must be regarded as passed under section 244 of the Code, and the appeal would therefore lie. Held, that the preliminary objection must prevail, and the first Court's order must be regarded as passed under section 281 and not under section 244 of the Code, inasmuch as L.'s claim which was rejected by it was nothing more than to come in as B.'s representative for the purpose of supporting her objections; and it was in right of a third person, whose interest he asserted to have passed to him, that he prayed admission to the proceedings, and this character was wholly distinct from that he filled as the legal representative of his deceased father. Because L. happened, for the purpose of the execution proceeding, to be his father's legal representative, and to be liable to satisfy the decree to the extent of any assets which might have come to his hands, it did not follow that any rights claimed by him through a third person must be dealt with, and could only be dealt with, between him and the decree-holder in the execution proceedings. Wahed Ali v. *Jumaee, 11 B. In execution of a decree in a former suit between the same parties a petition was presented by them to the Munsif's Court stating an arrangement between them for the payment of the amount decreed by instalments, with a provision that, in default of payment, "the Court may, on the application of the plaintiff, issue a warrant and collect the amount, with costs of the petition, from the produce of my share of the agraharam lands . . . . . which are held liable by the razinama decree of this suit, from the said lands, from my other property and from myself, and pay the same to plaintiff." The petition concluded thus: "We, both the parties, present this postpone-petition with our free will and consent, and pray for its being enforced according to its terms." Held, on second appeal, by the Full Court, affirming the decree of both the lower Courts, that, as it was clear that no intention existed between the parties to create new rights enforcible by suit in supersession of those acquired or declared by the decree, a suit on the "postpone-petition" was not maintainable. A considerable remission was allowed to the judgment-debtor, and some reduction was made in the amount of interest payable. The kistbundi contained an express proviso that in default of payment of three consecutive kists, the whole amount due under the bond was to become at once realisable; and it also provided that in case of default the amounts due were to be recovered by execution to which the judgment-debtor was to make no objection. The compromise mentioned in the decree provided that the amount in dispute should be paid in ten instalments, from 1284 to 1294 Fusli, the first to be paid on the 27th May 1877 (1284 Fusli), and the remaining nine instalments on Jaith Puranmashi of each succeeding Fusli year. On the 1st September 1883, the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree, alleging that the first four instalments had been paid, but not any of the succeeding instalments, and they claimed to recover, under the terms of the decree, the fifth and all the remaining instalments in a lump sum. The judgment-debtors contended that the application was barred by limitation, as they had not paid a single instalment, and more than three years had elapsed from the date of the first default; and that, even if the first four instalments had been paid, such payments could not be recognised by the Court as they had not been certified. Held, that recognition of such instalments was not barred by the terms of section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code. Sham Lal v. *Kanhia Lal, I. The deed recited that the decree was under execution, and that a mortgage bond, dated the 1st December 1873, in favour of the judgment-debtor by a third party, had been attached and advertised for sale, and that the decree-holder and judgment-debtor had arranged the following method of satisfying the decree: that the judgment-debtor should make over the said bond to the decree-holder, in order that he might bring a suit thereon at his own expense against the obligor, and realise the amount secured by the bond, and out of the amount realised satisfy the decree under execution with costs and future interest, together with all costs of the suit to be brought against the obligor, and together with a sum due by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder under a note of hand for R250 with interest; and other details which need not be stated. On the same day that this deed was executed, the decree-holder filed a petition in the Court, to the effect that under the agreement an arrangement had been made for payment of the judgment-debt, by which the judgment-debtor made over to him the bond advertised for sale in order that the petitioner should file a suit under it at his own cost against the obligor, and realise the debt due under the decree in execution with interest and costs; and he prayed that the sale to be held that day might be postponed, and the application for execution struck off for the present, and the previous attachment maintained, and stating that after realisation of the amount entered in the bond advertised for sale, an application for execution would be duly filed. On this the order was that the execution case be struck off the file, and the attachment maintained. On the 24th December 1883, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, alleging that the judgment-debtor had failed to make over the bond to him according to the agreement. The judgment-debtor objected that the decree was no longer capable of execution, having been superseded by the agreement of the 11th January 1881, and that the application was barred by limitation, the previous application being dated the 9th November 1880. Per OLDFIELD, J.—That the agreement of the 11th January 1881 did not contemplate, and had not the effect of, cancelling the decree and substituting for it a new contract, inasmuch as the deed contained nothing to the effect that the decree was superseded, and all it did was to provide means by which the decree, together with another small sum due by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder, might be satisfied without having recourse to the sale of the bond attached, and the effect would be that, on realisation, satisfaction would be certified in whole or in part to the Court executing the decree. Further, if the arrangement was to be regarded as within the meaning of an adjustment of the decree under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, it could only be recognised by the Court when certified by the decree-holder or judgment-debtor; and in this case the only certification which was made was by the decree-holder, by his petition of the 11th January 1881, which was in respect of a temporary arrangement under which the decree remained in force. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That the agreement of the 11th January 1881 was intended by the parties as a performance of the obligation created by the decree, by substituting a fresh obligation founded upon contract, but that the deed could not be regarded as such an adjustment of the decree as satisfied the requirements of section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the creditors, whilst admitting the creation of a separate contract, took care to say that the decree was to be kept alive, and the attachment thereunder was to subsist; and that, therefore, the certification of the adjustment was inadequate and could not be recognised in executing the decree. CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, ACT XIV OF 1882 (Act X of 1877), ss. 259, 260 (1859, s. 200)—continued.

1. ——— Decree for performance of a particular act.—A decree had been obtained that "the defendants do, within six weeks after the service upon them of this decree, remove the obstruction and reopen the pathway or lane leading from the north-west end of the plaintiff's house, northwards to a public road, as the same existed before the commencement of the suit and as described in the plaint." Held, that this was a decree for the performance of a particular act on the part of the defendants, and must be executed under the provisions of section 200, Act VIII of 1859,—i.e., by imprisonment of the party or attachment of his property, or by both: therefore, an order for execution of the decree by causing the obstruction to be removed was set aside as illegal. [10 B. L. R., Ap., 12: 18 W. R., 282

2. ——— Execution of decree for restitution of conjugal rights.—A., who had been directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, after the date of the decree permitted her daughter, who was of age, to reside in her house. Held, that such conduct on the part of A. was no such evidence of interference with her daughter's return as would justify the execution of the decree against her, under the provisions of section 200 of Act VIII of 1859. AJNASI KUAR v. SURAJ PRASAD . I. L. R., 1 All., 501

3. ——— Decree for possession of wife.—Enforcing execution of decree.—Where there has been a decree in favour of an applicant for special possession of his wife, and application made for execution, the process under the ordinary sections will not be enforced. AKBARALLY v. HOSSAIN ALLY
[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 101: 5 W. R., Mis., 29

4. ——— Decree ordering wife to return to husband.—Enforcing decree under a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against wife.—Quære,—Whether, under the present procedure, the Court can enforce its order upon a wife to return to her husband's by giving her over bodily into her husband's hands. Such disobedience would seem to fall within section 200 of the Code, and to be enforceable only by imprisonment, or attachment of property, or both. JUDOONATH BOSE v. SHUMSOONNISSA BEGUM. [8 W. R., P. C., 3: 11 Moore's I. A., 551

5. ——— Opportunity of, and refusal to, obey decree.—Enforcing execution of decree.—No order for enforcing a decree by imprisonment under section 200 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be made until the defendant has had an opportunity of obeying the decree, or has contumaciously refused to obey it. 6. ——— Decree for joint possession and management of property.—Attachment for disobedience to decree.—Civil Procedure Code,

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, ACT XIV OF 1882 (Act X of 1877), ss. 259, 260 (1859, s. 200).—Decree for joint possession and management of property—continued.

1877, s. 260.—By a decree relating to certain joint property belonging to the plaintiff and defendant, but which had previously been held in the sole name of the defendant, it was directed that the plaintiff and defendant should jointly manage the property, and that the names of both should appear in all papers connected with such property. The plaintiff subsequently applied to have his name registered in the Collectorate, but was opposed by the defendant, who, it appeared, also allowed the amlahs of the estate to continue to use his sole name. Held, that the Court had under the circumstances jurisdiction under section 260 of the Civil Procedure Code to attach the defendant's property until he had obeyed the decree by having the joint names of himself and the plaintiff inserted in all documents belonging to the estate. 2. ——— Application for money deposited in Court.—Question for Court executing decree.—Separate suit.—The plaintiffs having obtained decrees on certain hundis against K. and P., applied under Act VIII of 1859, section 237, for payment of certain moneys which had been deposited in Court in a suit in which one D. was the plaintiff and which had been attached by them. The ground of their application was, that D. had recovered a decree on certain hundis which had been fraudulently transferred to him by K. and P. The Munsif, holding that the question of the ownership of the decree could not be determined in the miscellaneous department, referred the applicants to regular suits. These were accordingly instituted, and the transfer to D. declared to be fraudulent and colourable. Held, that the question of the title of the plaintiffs as against D. to have their debt paid out of the money in deposit, ought to have been decided in the Court in which the money was in deposit. The Munsif was in error n directing the applicants to a regular suit. DEBEE PERSHAD v. GUJADHUR RAM . 20 W. R., 73

2. ——— Arrangement for instalments extending over twelve years.—Where a Collector recommended that the lands of a judgment-debtor should be exempted from auction sale, and that the judgment-debt should be satisfied by money instalments extending over a period of twelve years, and the Judge, on the matter being referred to the Civil Courts for sanction and approval, in sending the proceedings to the Munsif, intimated that the arrangement was a proper one, and the Munsif in his order referred to this opinion of the Judge,—Held, that the recommendation of the Collector should have been dealt with by the Court executing the decree in the exercise of its own judgment, and not in deference to the opinion expressed by the Judge, who exceeded his jurisdiction in interfering in the matter. The arrangement proposed by the Collector was not one which could be proposed or accepted under the terms of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. MUTTRA PERSHAD v. RAMPERSHAD

One of the defendants then appealed to the Privy Council, which reversed the decree of the High Court, and restored that of the Zillah Court. Held, that the decree of the first Court by being restored as it was made, was reaffirmed in its integrity, and the defendants generally were entitled to execute it, though only one had appealed to the Privy Council. 9. ——— Limitation as affecting those who do not appeal.—Where a decree for possession of certain property is made against three persons jointly, one of whom appeals against the decree only so far as it affects himself and not against the whole decree, and the decree does not relate to property in respect to which the defendants have a common interest and a common defence so that an appeal by one would imperil the whole decree, then the fact of one defendant having appealed will not prevent limitation running in favour of the others, against the execution of the decree. 10. ——— Application of, to ex parte decrees.—Decree on ground common to all parties.—Section 337, Act VIII of 1859, applies as well to ex parte decrees as to other decrees, the only question being whether the decision of the lower Court proceeded on a ground common to all the defendants. 12. ——— Decree on ground common to all parties.—Section 337, Civil Procedure Code, does not empower an Appellate Court to exercise the power with which it invests such Court when it finds that the ground on which it proposes to base its own decision is common to all the defendants, but only when it finds that the decision of the lower Court has proceeded on such common ground. 15. ——— Reversal in one suit where two suits have been erroneously brought instead of one.—Effect of reversal on other suit on appeal by one defendant.—Two suits brought by different parties claiming different interests in a certain share to set aside the sale of that share having been dismissed, one of the plaintiffs appealed and the sale was set aside. Held, that the decision must be considered as setting the sale aside as to the whole of that share, although the other parties did not appeal. 19. ——— Reversal of decree on appeal by one defendant.—A. and B. were sued on a joint liability to pay rent. A. did not defend, B. did, and a decree passed against both. B. appealed. Held, that it was competent to the Judge on appeal to reverse the decree, on the ground that there was no joint liability, but that B. occupied a separate estate at a separate rent. LUKHEE KANT SEIN v. RAMDEYAL DOSS . . Marsh., 281: 2 Hay, 288

20. ——— Main ground of decree affecting all defendants.—The plaintiff sued on a mortgage bond executed by the first defendant. The second defendant, who claimed the property under a mortgage from the first defendant, was admitted a defendant on his own application, but afterwards excluded from the suit. Before this was done he had incurred certain costs, which, by the Munsif's decree, he was ordered to bear himself. Upon appeal by the first defendant the Civil Judge found that the mortgage bond sued upon was not proved, dismissed the suit, and ordered the plaintiff to pay all costs, those of the second defendant included. Held that, under section 337 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was competent to the Civil Judge so to modify the Munsif's decree, as the main ground of the whole decision—viz., the validity of the mortgage bond—affected all the defendants in common, and the appeal of the first defendant and the decision of the Appellate Court had reference to that common ground. S.*, the zemindar, brought a suit against B., a ryot, for recovery of arrears of rent, valued below R100. B. set up in defence that the rent was not payable to D. C. S., but to N. C. A., the mokurraridar. N. C. A., who claimed under a mokurrari title, and alleged that he was in receipt of the rents from the ryots, was made a party under section 73, Act VIII of 1859. The Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by N. C. A., which was heard and decided by the Subordinate Judge on reference by the District Judge, the decree of the first Court was reversed, and the suit dismissed. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, that N. C. A. was properly made a defendant to the suit, and that he could prefer an appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance, and that the Court of Appeal could, on his appeal, set aside the whole decree. ——— Restoration of appeal rejected for neglect to give security for costs.—An appeal, although it may have been rejected by the Appellate Court under section 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon failure by the appellant to furnish security demanded under that section, may be restored, on sufficient grounds, at the Court's discretion. The High Court having apparently treated an appeal as though, after rejection of it under the above section, a petition tendering security to the amount demanded, and asking restoration of the appeal, was not entertainable and could not be considered—Held, by the Judicial Committee, that restoration was within the Court's discretion, and that there were grounds for it, upon the appellant's giving approved security within such time as the Court might fix. Subsequently some of the objectors who claimed a 14-annas share in the property compromised with the decree-holder, who then applied that the remaining 2 annas in possession of certain specified parties should be sold. The lower Court ordered that the sale of these 2 annas should not proceed if the objectors who claimed them paid to the decree-holder a sum equal, rateably, to that levied from the 14 annas. Held, on appeal by the decree-holder against the original judgment-debtor, that the provisions of section 246, and not those of sections 229 and 230, of Act VIII of 1859, applied to the application, which really sought to enforce a particular remedy against a third party named, and not against the original defendant. In execution of a decree against A., the "right, title, and interest of A." in certain lands were attached. M. filed a petition under section 246 of Act VIII of 1859, in which he admitted that A. had a one-twentieth share, but alleged that A. was entitled to no more than a one-twentieth share; and that he, M., has a two-twentieths share. Held that, assuming the attachment of A.'s eighth title and interest to be an irregular attachment under section 213, M., whose lands were included within such attachment, was entitled to come in and claim his own two-twentieths share, and the Court was bound to investigate his claim under section 246 of Act VIII of 1859. Held, also, in both cases, that M. was entitled to have the attachment removed so far as his share was concerned. Held also (per PHEAR, J.), that in the first case, M. was entitled to have the attachment removed so far as regards the margin in excess of A.'s actual share; and that in the second case he was entitled to have the whole attachment discharged. Subsequently D. obtained a decree against C. alone, and on the 11th January 1884 applied for attachment of the one-third share of C. in the property attached by A. and B., which belonged to C. and his two brothers jointly. No order was on that date passed on the application. On the 14th January 1884 E. purchased from C. his one-third share in the attached properties, and the purchase-money was, by arrangement between the brothers, applied in satisfying the debt due to A. and B. On the 28th January 1884 an order was passed on the application of the 11th January 1884 granting the attachment asked for by D.; and on the 23rd April 1884 E. preferred his claim to the one-third share purchased by him, and which had been since the purchase attached by D. The claim was disallowed on the ground that E. had no title to the property, he having purchased whilst the property was under attachment. Held, on

In execution, A. attached and put up to sale certain property as belonging to the mother. B. objected to the sale, alleging that the property was not her mother's, but was inherited by her from her father. The Munsif disallowed her objection, on the ground that only the right, title, and interest of the defendant's mother was put up for sale. On appeal the Judge set aside the Munsif's order. Held that, for the purposes of her objection, B. was a third party unconnected with the decree, and that her objection should have been disposed of under section 246 of Act VIII of 1859. There is nothing in the provisions of sections 278 to 283 of the Code limiting, in a suit under section 283, a plaintiff's right to compensation for his loss, or the defendant's responsibility for his wrongful act; and if the existence of the summary procedure (in sections 278 to 282) leads to delay, and that delay to further loss, the consequences must fall upon the defendant. COMMISSION—continued.

28. ——— Grounds for granting commission.—Inconvenience.—Expense.—At the trial of a person for an offence under section 411, Penal Code, the Court of Session, under section 33 of the Evidence Act, used against the accused the evidence of the owner of the property in respect of which the accused was charged and of his wife taken by commission during the enquiry, and the evidence of the servant of those persons taken at the enquiry, and also the evidence of the owner of the property taken during the trial under a commission issued by the Sessions Judge under section 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds upon which the Sessions Judge admitted the evidence taken during the enquiry were that the attendance of the witnesses could not be procured without an expense of R500, an amount which he considered unreasonable; that the witnesses would be inconvenienced; and that their evidence did not concern the accused personally, having reference only to the identification of the property in respect of which the accused was charged. Held, that the Sessions Judge had improperly admitted such evidence. Inconvenience to witnesses is no ground allowed under section 33 of the Evidence Act, and the question of identification was a most material one, and the evidence of the witnesses in question was of the utmost moment, the whole case resting on it; and as regards the ground of expense, it was impossible to consider the amount unreasonable, considering that the entire case rested on the evidence of those witnesses, and that the accused had not cross-examined those whose evidence had been taken by commission, nor, looking at his position, could he arrange for their cross-examination. Held, that on these grounds the Sessions Judge was not justified in issuing a commission under section 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 29. ——— Application by prisoner for commission to place out of the jurisdiction.—Previously to the trial at the Sessions the prisoner had applied to the Court for commissions to Pondicherry and Mauritius to take evidence on his behalf. The application was refused on the ground that the High Court had no authority to issue a commission in such a case, but the learned Judge (WEST, J.) reserved the question for the full Court. Held, that the High Court had no power to issue a commission out of the jurisdiction in a criminal case on an application by the accused. There is nothing in that section to show that, when such order is made, the commitment thereupon must necessarily be made by the Magistrate who has discharged him, whilst the first proviso to it shows that it may be made by the Court of Session or by the District Magistrate, according as the power under that section happens to be exercised by one or the other. The meaning of the words in section 423 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, "or order him to be tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court, or committed for trial," is as follows: If on an appeal from a conviction the Appellate Court finds that the accused person, who was triable only by a Magistrate of the first class or by a Court of Session, has, by an oversight or under a misapprehension, been tried, convicted, and sentenced by a Magistrate of the second class, the Appellate Court may in that case reverse the finding and sentence, and order the accused to be re-tried by a Magistrate of the first class or by the Court of Session; and, in like manner, when the appellant, who was triable solely by the Court of Session, has been tried, convicted, and sentenced by a Magistrate of the first class, the Sessions Judge, in disposing of the appeal, is empowered to reverse the finding and sentence, and to order that the accused be committed for trial. Their names were also entered as such shareholders in the registration of the company under Act X of 1866. In January 1867 certain contributors (amongst whom appellants were not) and certain creditors applied to the Recorder of Rangoon, under clauses 4 and 5, section 101, to have the company wound up, and an official liquidator appointed. A liquidator having been appointed, he applied to the Court to call upon each of the contributories, named in a list which he presented, to pay up his contribution. Accordingly, the Recorder declared the appellants to be contributories, and directed each of them to pay the amount appearing against his name. Held, that this was a suit by the official liquidator to have appellants declared contributories, and an appeal therefore lay from the Recorder's decision so declaring them. Held that the liability, under sections 6, 11, 18, 22, 36, and 37, of a registered shareholder, as member of a company, to contribute, is a primâ facie liability only; it being open to him to show that although his name was on the register, yet he did not agree to become a member; and that, as appellants were not cognizant of (much less did they assent to) the registration of their names as shareholders, whilst they refused to receive any shares or pay up any calls or deposits, the sole step taken by them of joining others in putting forth the prospectus and affixing their names therein to a certain number of shares could not be said to be an agreement to become members of the company, and therefore they were not contributories. C. and B.* were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. Merwanji Framji, one of the members of the said firm of M. F. & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G., one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that, in July 1881, he procured his own election, and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 8th August 1881, procured the passing of a resolution at a board meeting to the effect that as Messrs. C. and B., the company's solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable, for the interests of the company, that a change should be made, and that Messrs. H., C., and L., be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G., of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H., C., and L. had been for a long time the solicitors of G., and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs, and a violation of the articles of association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G. and two other directors of the company, and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874, and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H., C., and L. as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing any thing inconsistent with the memorandum and articles of association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of Merwanji Framji, and that the powers conferred on the agents by clause 98 of the articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. Held that, having regard to the memorandum and articles of association, the contract was that the firm of M. F. & Co. for the time being should be the agents of the company for twenty-five years, and that the right to sue on the contract by its nature survived to the plaintiffs after the death of Merwanji Framji. Held, also, that there being no provision either in the articles of association or the agreement of 26th August 1874, that the power thereby conferred on the agents should be subject to the control or assent of the directors, there was no right in the directors to interfere with the agents in the exercise of their powers otherwise than as representing the company in virtue of their general powers of management. 16. ———— Authority of agent.—Corporation.—Contract under seal.—Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 and 9 Vict., c. 16, s. 97.—The Scinde Railway Company was incorporated by 18 and 19 Victoria, Cap. 115, for the purpose of making and maintaining railways in India, and for other purposes. This was repealed by 20 and 21 Victoria, Cap. 160, which authorised the Company to extend their operations and also their capital, &c. This Act by section 3 declared the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to be incorporated with it. By section 18 the Company have a "seal for use in India in lieu of the common seal of the Company, and from time to time may vary and renew it, and make regulations for its use; and except as by this Act otherwise expressly provided, every document sealed with such seal, in conformity with such regulations, or in pursuance of any order of the directors, or of any authority given by the Company under their common seal shall be as valid and effectual as if the common seal were affixed thereto." By section 54, "the Company from time to time may appoint and remove such committees, persons or person as the Company think fit to act on behalf of the Company in India or elsewhere, with respect to the making, maintaining, managing, working, and using of the railways and other works of the Company, and the control and conduct of any of the affairs in India or elsewhere of the Company; and may delegate to any such committee, persons and person respectively all or any of the powers of the Company and of the directors and officers thereof, which the Company thinks it expedient that such committee, persons, and person respectively should possess for the purposes of his or their respective appointment." In January 1867, E. was the agent of the Company in India, and he entered, it was alleged on their behalf, into a contract with the plaintiffs for sixty sets of iron-work for low-sided waggons. The plaintiffs' firm did not deal in iron-work, and they had to get the goods manufactured for them in England. The Board of Directors were at the time supplying iron-work for the Company. There was nothing to show that E. had been appointed under the provisions of section 54 of the Act 20 and 21 Victoria, Cap. 160, nor was there any evidence of the extent of his power or authority. A specification of the contract differed from it, in that it stated the waggons to be covered waggons, and not low-sided waggons. The contract was not made under seal of the Company, nor was the iron-work, the subject of the contract, ever accepted by the Company. The defendants admitted that at the date of the alleged contract E. was the agent of the Company in India, but denied that his power extended to the making of such contract; they further stated that the contract, if entered into, had been afterwards cancelled. Held by PHEAR, J., that there was no evidence to show that E. had authority to make the contract. The contract was one which E. would have had power to make in writing only, under section 97 of the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, had he been appointed under section 54, 20 and 21 Victoria, Cap. 160; but there was no proof of such

17. ———— Duties of promoters and directors.—Trustees.—A. and M., at the request of B., agreed to get up a company which should purchase from B. the good-will, stock, and furniture of Spence's Hotel and all outstandings due to B. for four lakhs of rupees. The scheme was made public, and shares were applied for in excess of the intended capital. On the 1st May 1863 the memorandum of association was registered, signed, inter alia, by A. and M. On the same day the prospectus was issued, which stated, inter alia, that "the company have purchased from the former proprietors for the sum of R4,00,000 the entire stock of hotel and shop, together with the outstandings on the 30th April 1863, the latter amounting to about R50,000. The dividend of 10 per cent. per annum for two years is guaranteed to the shareholders." The prospectus was signed by A. and M. and another as directors, but the last took no active part. On the same day an agreement was signed by B., whereby he agreed, in consideration of R4,00,000 paid by A. and M. as therein mentioned, — viz., R1,50,000 in paid-up shares of the company,—to transfer to them, or Spence's Hotel Company, Limited, all his right, title, and interest in Spence's Hotel, the good-will, furniture, outstandings, &c. The articles of association were dated 7th September 1863. A. and M. with two others formed the first board of directors. These directors, at an extraordinary meeting on August 1st, presented a report, which was adopted by the meeting, in which they said, "B. has deposited with M. and A. security sufficient to ensure the payment of the 10 per cent. dividend guaranteed to him by the company." On the 5th December 1863 a deed was executed, with the approval of the company's solicitors, by B. on the one part, and A. and M. on the other, which, after reciting that as security for the guarantee of the 10 per cent. dividend B. had deposited with A. and M. 400 fully paid-up shares in the company, witnessed "that B. would pay to A. and M. such sums as would be necessary to make up and pay half-yearly a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum; and that he constituted A. and M. his attorneys to sell the 400 shares and out of the proceeds to make good the yearly dividend of 10 per cent., and after such payment towards the guaranteed dividend, to hold the remaining shares or balance of money in trust for B. absolutely." On the same day another deed, prepared by A.'s private solicitor, was executed by B. on one part, and A. and M. on the other, which, after reciting an agreement by B. with A. and M. in April, that if they would assist him in forming such company, for the purchase of Spence's Hotel, and as they had in fact since formed, "he, B., would pay or secure to them, A. and M., such fitting and proper remuneration for their trouble and risk as might be ultimately arranged;" and after reciting the first deed of 5th December 1865, witnessed "that B. covenanted with A. and M. that, notwithstanding the trust contained in the before-mentioned indenture whereby the surplus mentioned was declared to belong to B. absolutely, the same surplus should belong to, and be the exclusive property of, A. and M. in equal shares: and that if the net profits of the Hotel Company should prove sufficient to pay the whole 10 per cent., then the whole of the 400 shares deposited with A. and M. should be retained by them for their own benefit in equal shares." This deed was undisclosed until the filing of their written statement by A. and M. in the present suit. There was no actual deposit of the 400 shares by B., but A. and M. respectively took 200 shares in their own names. ₹10,947-9-6 were paid by A. and M. to make up the deficit on the guaranteed dividend up to December 1864. Also, on the 5th December 1863, B. executed another deed, in which, after reciting that he had guaranteed that the outstanding debts of the Hotel should realise, before May 1865, ₹50,000 at least, and that he had deposited with the company 50 fully paid-up shares as security for this guarantee, he, B., covenanted to pay any deficit, and appointed the company his attorneys to realise these shares, and out of the proceeds to pay themselves the deficit, and, subject to this, to hold the shares or the proceeds in trust for him, B. Fifty shares were received from B. by A. under the trusts of this deed. The outstandings fell short of the guaranteed amount by ₹19,255. In a suit by the company to recover the 400 shares and for an account of the profits of the same,—Held, in the Court below and on appeal, that the suit was rightly brought by the company as plaintiffs. That A. and M. were the agents of the company to effect the purchase, and, as such, were bound to make for the company the best bargain which they reasonably could, and forbidden to obtain personal profit or benefit out of the matter. A. and M., as regards the beneficial interest in the 400 shares, were trustees thereof for the benefit of the company from the date when that interest arose, and A. and M. were jointly as well as severally responsible for the 400 shares after satisfying the trust of the guarantee. In the lower Court it was decreed that A. should make over the 50 shares or their value to the company, and account for the interim receipts and profits. A. and M. to account for the 400 shares at par value at least, and for dividends and profits thereon, including profits, if any, made by sale at a premium. A. to account similarly for the 50 shares. B. to make good his two guarantees after being allowed the benefit of the trust of the 400 shares. 18. ——— Liability of directors for negligence in management.—Employment of agent by directors.—Acquiescence of shareholders.—Liability of estate of deceased director.—Banker, Who is a.—The plaintiffs' company went into liquidation early in the year 1879, in consequence of losses sustained by the failure of Nursey Kessowji & Co., which firm had been the bankers of the said company. The said firm had stopped payment on the 26th December 1878, having then in its hands the sum of ₹8,80,250-14-1, belonging to the company. In this suit the official liquidators of the company sought to recover that sum from the defendants, who had been directors of the company, and a further sum of ₹2,48,670-14-0 as damages sustained by the company through the fraud and gross negligence of the defendants in permitting Nursey Kessowji, the agent of the company, to deal with certain shares for his own purposes. The first four defendants were the directors of the company; the fifth defendant was the assignee of the estate of Nursey Kessowji, whose firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co. had become insolvent. The plaintiffs' company was registered on the 31st July 1878, and by the memorandum and articles of association the said Nursey Kessowji was appointed secretary, treasurer, and agent of the company for a period of twenty-five years, upon the terms and conditions contained in an agreement annexed to the articles of association, whereby it was (inter alia) provided that Nursey Kessowji should deposit with such banker or bankers as the directors for the time being should appoint, all the moneys due from him to the said company, and exceeding in amount at any one time the sum of ₹5,000. On the 6th August 1878, the directors of the company appointed the firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co. to be the bankers of the company. It was further alleged by the plaintiffs that, immediately after the registration of the company, the directors and Nursey Kessowji began to borrow money upon the credit of the company far in excess of the legitimate wants of the company, and to pay over the money so borrowed to the firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co., to be used by that firm in speculative business; that the said loans were obtained by the directors, not bonâ fide for the purposes of the company, but for the purposes of supplying funds to the firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co., to enable it to carry on its business. At the end of the year 1878 the sum paid over by the directors to the firm of Nursey Kessowji had, by reason of such borrowing, amounted to the sum of ₹8,80,250. The plaintiffs alleged that the said loans were wholly unnecessary; and they charged the directors with gross negligence in raising the said loans or permitting them to be raised; and in permitting the moneys so borrowed to remain in the hands of the firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co., to be applied by that firm to its own purposes. As to the R2,48,670-14-0, the plaintiffs alleged that certain unallotted shares of the total value of R3,93,750 had been left in the hands of the directors to be disposed of, the proceeds of which were to be applied in making certain payments due by the company; that, instead of applying these shares to such purposes, the directors had filled up the said shares in the name of Nursey Kessowji, and authorised him to mortgage the same, in order to raise funds; that the said Nursey Kessowji had accordingly dealt with the said shares, and had applied the proceeds thereof to his own purposes. The plaintiffs charged the directors with fraud and gross negligence as to these shares, and claimed to recover R2,48,670-14-0 in respect thereof from the defendants. The defendants alleged that they had acted bonâ fide in all matters connected with the company; that they had always believed the firm of Nursey Kessowji & Co. to be in a solvent condition; and had no reason to mistrust its management of the affairs of the company. One of the defendants (No. 3) died after the institution of the suit, and his sons were made parties. His representatives and Kessowji Naik (defendant No. 1) also claimed to set off against the plaintiffs' claim certain payments made by them as guarantors for the company. Held, (1) that one of the directors knew as a fact that the agent was not in a solvent condition; and that the other directors, in the circumstances of the case, ought to have ascertained his financial condition. (2) Directors are responsible for the management of their company where, by the articles of association, the business is to be conducted by the board with the assistance of an agent. They cannot divest themselves of their responsibility by delegating the whole management to the agent, and abstaining from all enquiry. If he proves unfaithful under such circumstances, the liability is theirs, just as much as if they themselves had been unfaithful. (3) That the directors had not used fair and reasonable diligence in the management of the company's affairs, and were liable to refund the money entrusted by them to the agent, Nursey Kessowji, without proper knowledge as to whether it was needed, and without any subsequent investigation of a serious character with respect to its disposal. Such conduct amounted to gross negligence. All the directors were equally responsible, as all attended the directors' meetings, and all gave the same blind sanction to every act and proposal of the agent. Held, also, that the estate of the deceased director was liable on the ground that the misfeasance of a director is a breach of trust, and not a mere personal default. A separate debt cannot be set off against a joint and several debt, and directors cannot set off money due from the company to them against sums which they may be ordered to

19. ——— Power of directors to deal with profits either by declaring a dividend or by appropriating to reserve fund.—Power of shareholders to interfere with declaration of dividend.—The articles of association of the B. Co. provided (a) that the directors might, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, declare a dividend; (b) that the directors might, before recommending any dividend, set aside out of the profits of the company such sum as they thought proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies or for equalising dividends, &c. The directors of the company added to the existing reserve fund a certain portion of the profits of the company for the year 1885, and thereby diminished the amount of dividend which they could otherwise have declared. Some of the shareholders disapproved of the course taken by the directors, and contended (1) that the shareholders of the company had a right by resolution to withdraw from the reserve fund a sum sufficient to enable the directors to declare a suitable dividend; (2) that they had the right to direct the directors to declare a dividend greater or less than that recommended by the directors out of the amount standing to profit and loss, including the amount so withdrawn. Held, that under the articles of association the contention of the shareholders could not be sustained. The reserve fund consisted of profits, and by the articles the disposal of profits was expressly entrusted to the directors. To allow the shareholders to deal with it would be a direct contravention of the articles, which entrusted to the management of the directors all the business of the company. Nor could the shareholders decide the question as to the amount of dividend. By the articles they agreed that the directors should declare the dividend, and only reserved to themselves the power to vote a dividend to which they objected. The remedy of the shareholders, if they were dissatisfied with the directors, was to remove them from office, or to alter the articles of association. The contracts for the re-purchase were signed by three directors of the defendants' company, and on each was a memorandum, initialled by two of them, referring to a list of the "Share Receipts," delivered with the words "we are duly to examine and receive the same at the fixed time." One hundred and ninety letters of allotment in the names of several persons, and for various numbers of shares, endorsed by the original allottees, and initialled by one of the three directors, were, together with receipts for the first call, handed over to the persons who acted for the plaintiffs by the three directors of the defendants' company who made the contracts. In April the defendants' company made a fresh call, payable on the 4th May. A list of the names and addresses of the original allottees of what were called "shares in the market" (i.e., other than those purchased by the company itself for cash, or held by it on mortgage) was made out from the date of settlement, and notices of forfeiture for non-payment of the call were sent by post. The original holders of the 190 letters of allotment were included in the list, but no notice was sent to the plaintiffs. On the 27th of May all shares upon which the second call was not paid were declared to be forfeited for the benefit of the company. The defendants' company, as stated in the memorandum of association, was established among other objects for the purchase and sale of debentures, stocks, shares of joint-stock companies (including the shares of this company), and other securities, the making loans and advances on such securities as the directors of the company might think fit. Held, that the contracts for the purchase of the 2,000 shares being within the scope of the authority of the directors, the defendants were bound by them; that the defendants were bound to treat the plaintiffs as the holders of those shares, and to give them the notice required by the articles of association; and that they were not at liberty to give that notice to the original allottees, who, by the admission of the defendants, testified by the acts of their agents in making the contracts, had parted with the shares; that the shares were, consequently, not legally forfeited, and the defendants having refused to accept them, and they being then unsaleable, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full price as damages. The letters of allotment indorsed by the allottees and receipts for the first call were made over, at the time of purchase, to the company. No transfers, however, were executed by the allottees, nor were the shares registered by the company in their own name, but they continued to stand in the names of the allottees. Two thousand of the seven thousand shares had been re-sold by the company; and the remaining five thousand were mentioned in a list, kept by the company, of shares purchased by them. On application to the allottees to have their names removed from the list of contributories, as framed by the official liquidator,—Held that the company, through its directors, having, as well by the act of purchase as by their subsequent conduct, treated themselves as the owners of the shares, could not be permitted to take advantage of their own neglect, or that of their officers, in not registering the shares in the name of the company, and that the name of the

A joint-stock company, even though it be empowered by its memorandum of association to deal in the shares of other companies, is not thereby empowered to deal in its own shares, and a purchase by the directors of the company of its own shares, on behalf of the company, is therefore, under such circumstances, ultra vires. A sharer in a joint-stock company can maintain an action against the directors of such company to compel them to restore to the company funds of the company that have by them been employed in transactions that the directors have no authority to enter into, without making the company a party to the suit. Where a shareholder purchased shares in a joint-stock company, knowing at the time that similar companies were in the habit of dealing in their own shares and those of other companies, and believing that the company in question adopted the same practice, but made no enquiry to ascertain whether or not such was the case, nor made any objections to such dealings of the company until it was discovered they had resulted in loss, it was held that he had, by his own conduct, lost his right to hold the directors personally liable in respect of such dealing, and the result was held to be the same whether the said shareholder was beneficially entitled to his shares, or merely a trustee of them for others. G.* received notice of the call, but did not pay it. On 18th April 1866 the directors desired the secretary to write to shareholders who had not paid their first call in full, asking them to do so at once. R. G., who had not signed the articles of association, on receipt of notice from the secretary, requested to be allowed to withdraw his money, forfeiting one-fifth, or to be allowed to hold five shares instead of fifty. The request was refused by the directors, who on 18th July 1866 passed a further resolution that the defaulters, among whom R. G. was named, "have notice sent them that unless the amount of the calls due on their respective shares, together with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 15th December 1865 be paid into the National Bank of India, Calcutta, on or before the 7th August 1866, legal proceedings will be adopted against them for the recovery without further notice." R. G., on receiving notice of this resolution, wrote, through his attorneys, informing the directors that he would apply to the High Court to have his name removed from the register of shareholders. The directors thereupon declared the shares to be forfeited. On 25th September 1866 a resolution to wind up the company voluntarily was passed at a general meeting of the shareholders, and was afterwards confirmed. In the course of the winding-up the liquidator applied to the Court, under section 154, Act X of 1866, to determine whether R. G. was entitled to a refund of the deposit money paid by him on the fifty shares allotted to him in the company, or whether he was liable to pay, as a contributory, the call in respect of his shares made before the shares were forfeited. It was not until the hearing of this application that R. G. became aware of the facts which proved that the directors had published material statements which they knew to be untrue. Held, that the issuing of a prospectus is an act comprised within the term "management and conduct of the company's business." The statements made in the prospectus were the representations of the company. R. G. was entitled to have his contract to take 50 shares set aside, and to be repaid the amount of his deposit money. 19.—On the 9th October 1878 the National Bank purchased from the N. Co. a bill of exchange for 4,000 dollars, equivalent to ₹8,680, drawn by the N. Co. upon the firm of N. K. & Co. of Hongkong. The bill was in the following form: "Sixty days after sight of this first of exchange (second and third of the same tenor and date not being paid) pay to the order of the National Bank of India the sum of dollars four thousand only, value received, and place the same to account of Nursey Kessowji, Ghelabhoy Pudumsey, Directors. Nursey Kessowji, Secretary, Treasurer and Agent. The Nursey Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited." The bill was duly accepted and presented for payment, but was dishonoured. On the 6th January 1879, the bank gave notice of dishonour, and demanded payment from the company as drawers of the bill. On the 18th January 1879, the N. Co. was ordered to be wound up, and the bank sent in a claim against the company as drawers of the bill, and subsequently sent in an alternative claim for ₹8,680, being the "amount paid by the bank to, and received by, the company." Held, on the authority of In re the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, I. L. R., 4 Bom. 275, that having regard to the form of the bill, the N. Co. could not be made liable as drawers; but held, also, that the bank was entitled to recover the amount of the bill from the N. Co. as money received to the use of the bank, on the ground that the directors of the N. Co., while acting within their authority, had sold to the bank on behalf of the company, as a bill upon which the company was liable, one upon which the company was not liable, and had, therefore, been guilty of misrepresentation within the meaning of sections 18 and 19 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). to raise money by an equally well-known and recognised mode,—viz., by drawing, endorsing, or accepting bills of exchange,—must be deemed to be included in the general words "or in such other manner as they deem best." Three of the directors of the above company, one of whom was also the secretary, treasurer, and agent of the company, drew a bill in favour of S. in the following form: "Sixty days after the date of this first of exchange (second and third of the same tenor and date not being paid) pay to the order of S. the sum of rupees two lakhs only, value received, and place to account of G. P., K. N., N. K., Secretary, Treasurer, and Agent, The New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, Directors." The bill was endorsed by S. to the Bank of Bombay, was duly presented for payment to the drawee, and protested for non-payment. Subsequently to the date of the drawing of the bill, the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, went into liquidation. The Bank of Bombay claimed as endorsees of the bill to prove against the company as drawers. Held that, assuming that companies under the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866) are by section 47 liable on bills of exchange drawn on their behalf, or on account of persons acting under their authority, the bill in question was not such a bill. Whether or not a note or bill must, on the face of it, express that it is made, accepted, or endorsed, "by or on behalf or on account of" the company, yet there must be on the face of it that which shows that it was so made, accepted, or endorsed, and which excludes the inference that it was made, accepted, or endorsed by or on behalf or on account of any other person. A bill or note may be in a certain sense on behalf of or on account of a company, though there is upon its face no reference to the company, even, in the form of a description of the persons who actually make, accept, or endorse as being directors or secretary. As between such persons and the company such a bill or note may well be on behalf or on account of the company, but it is not therefore so between the company and third parties. So far as third parties are concerned, a company under the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866) can be made liable on a bill or note only when such bill or note on the face of it expresses that it was made, accepted, or endorsed by, or on behalf, or on account of the company, or where that fact appears by necessary inference from what the face of the instrument itself shows. The addition to the signatures of individuals as makers, drawers, acceptors, or endorsers of notes or bills, of their description as director or directors, secretary, treasurer, and agent of a certain company, is not considered to raise such inference, as it does not exclude the supposition that, though described as directors, &c., they intended to make themselves personally liable to holders of the instrument, though as between themselves and the company they may be entitled to be indemnified for anything they may have paid on account of the company in respect

27. ———— Bills of exchange, Issue of.—Transactions ultra vires.—Re-drafts.—A company was formed with the following objects, as stated in the memorandum of association, viz., "of securing valuable property in the new port and town of C. and its immediate vicinity; and of improving the property so acquired by building upon, letting, or selling it, as may be deemed most advisable; and of undertaking the construction of public works calculated to facilitate trade, and also of constructing tramways, roads, docks, wharves, and jetties upon the lands so to be acquired; and for all other purposes that may be essential or conducive to the attainment of, or connected with, the above objects." Soon after the establishment of the company, the directors were induced to take a share in, and become liable for the cost of, a mill for husking rice, which it was intended to establish by a separate company; and a considerable sum was advanced out of the funds of the company for the building of the mill and for machinery, &c. The undertaking failed, and the directors, to avoid losing the advances of the company, resolved to take over the mill, and carry it on as the property of the company. They accordingly purchased a large quantity of rice which was husked at the mill, and consigned to several firms in England. P. M. & Co. were appointed agents of the company in Calcutta for the purpose of shipping the rice, under letters from the directors guaranteeing that the company would pay at maturity any re-drafts which might be drawn on P. M. & Co. as their agents in respect of the shipments. Bills of exchange were drawn by P. M. & Co. on the firms to which the respective consignments were made, and these bills were sold in the ordinary course of business in Calcutta, P. M. & Co. realising the proceeds for the benefit of the company. Those bills were honoured by the respective consignees. The rice was sold in England at a considerable loss, and re-drafts for the deficiency were drawn on P. M. & Co. or on the company. The company went into liquidation during these transactions. Some of these re-drafts had been accepted by the company, and others merely registered by the liquidators as claims against the company. Claims were now made on the company by the drawees or endorsees of these re-drafts, but the liquidators declined to pay them, stating that the proceedings in connection with the consignments of rice were not authorised by the memorandum and articles of association of the company, and that therefore the company was not liable for any losses in respect of such consignments. Held, that trading in rice was a transaction ultra vires of the company; the directors therefore could not bind the company, and the consignees could not recover in respect of the shipments. The company was not liable on the re-drafts; it had no power to issue bills of exchange or to accept the re-drafts, and therefore the holders of those which had been in fact accepted were in no better position than the holders of those which had not been accepted. Where a note, which had been taken by the company as a security from two judgment-debtors of the company, was endorsed by the company to a third party, and discounted by him, and was on the due date, not having been taken up by the makers, renewed by the company,—Held, that such negotiation of the note by the company was within the ordinary course of the business of the company. missory notes, or in such other manner as he might deem best; and for the purpose of securing the repayment of any money so borrowed, to make any arrangement which he might deem expedient by conveying or assigning away property of the company to trustees or otherwise. N. K. was also secretary, treasurer, and agent of three other mill companies in Bombay. On the 31st October 1878 the directors passed the following resolution: "That the unallotted shares be filled up in the name of Nursey Kessowji, Esquire, secretary, treasurer, and agent, who is empowered to mortgage them at a fair rate of interest to enable him to obtain funds for the use of the company." On the 11th November 1878 P. advanced a sum of R1,00,500 upon the terms contained in a Gujarati writing of that date, and signed by N. K. In this document N. K. acknowledged the receipt of the money, for which 335 shares in the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company were duly handed over as security, and he agreed to repay it within three months. The last clause in the agreement stated that it was "duly agreed to and approved by him (N. K.) and his heirs and representatives." As an additional security, P., when advancing the loan, obtained from K. N. (father of N. K.) a guarantee in the following terms: "To Thuker Purmanundass Jivandass. Written by Sha Kessowji Naik. To wit,—This day Sha Nursey Kessowji has received from you R1,00,500, namely one lakh and five hundred, having deposited by way of security 335, namely three hundred and thirty-five, 'shares' of 'The New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited.' If your said money cannot be paid with interest by the expiration of the time, and you should sustain any kind of loss in (respect of) that, I am duly to pay the same. As to that I am not to raise any obstacle or objection. In case it should be necessary, I am to fill up and duly deliver to you an 'indemnity bond' on stamped paper through your vakeel (solicitor). This writing is duly agreed to and approved by me and my heirs and representatives. Bombay, the 11th of November in the English year 1878." On the evening of the day on which the loan was made,—viz., 11th November 1878,—but without the knowledge of K. N., it was agreed between N. K. and P. that the time for the repayment of the loan should be extended to six months. In December 1878 N. K. became insolvent, and on 28th December 1878 a petition was presented to the High Court to wind up the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company. On the 30th December, P., through his solicitors, wrote a letter to the company, stating that N. K. had obtained a loan from him of R1,00,500 on behalf of the company, and enquiring whether the fact appeared in the company's books. To this letter he received a reply signed by "K. N., Director," stating that the loan appeared in the books in P.'s name. On the 17th January 1879, an order was made for the winding-up of the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, and on the 4th February 1879 P. gave notice to the official liquida-tors of the company of his claim against the company for the money advanced by him on the 11th November 1878. In March 1869 he filed a suit against K. N. to enforce his guarantee, but was unsuccessful, the Court holding that, by extending the period of the loan to six months, the agreement of the 11th November 1878 had been materially varied without K. N.'s knowledge, and that K. N. was consequently discharged. On the 24th April 1879 P. filed his affidavit in support of his claim against the company. The company resisted the claim. Held (1) that the directors had power, under the memorandum and articles of association, to authorise N. K. to borrow money on behalf of the company, and that they had done so, and with that object had entrusted him with the unallotted shares. (2) That when P. advanced the loan to N. K., he was led to believe that N. K. was obtaining it on behalf of the four mill companies of which he was secretary, treasurer, and agent, but that P. was not aware and was not informed for which of the said companies the loan was obtained, and that the money was in fact advanced to N. as to an agent acting on behalf of an undisclosed principal. (3) That P., when he discovered that the money was obtained for the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, was entitled to claim against the company and to rank as a creditor of the company for the amount advanced to N. K. with interest from the date of the loan,—viz., 11th November 1878,—to the date of the presentation of the petition to wind up the company. PURMANUNDASS v. CORMACK

30. ——— Borrowing in excess of power in articles of association.—Ratification.—Under the articles of association of a limited company, the directors had power, from time to time as they might see fit, without any previous consent of the shareholders, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding R50,000, on the bill, bond, note, or other security of the company, upon such terms as they might think proper; and had power, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company previously obtained at a general meeting, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding in the whole, together with the R50,000, the sum of R1,00,000. K. advanced sums of money to the company amounting in 1879 to over R80,000. No previous sanction was given to any of these advances. On the 4th October 1879, an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders was held, at which a resolution was passed sanctioning a mortgage to K. of the whole of the company's property, except a certain garden, to secure the payment of a sum, not exceeding R1,00,000, for advances already made and to be made, with interest at 7 per cent. This resolution was confirmed on the 16th of October, and the mortgage was executed on the 22nd of December 1879. Subsequently the company was ordered to be wound up, and K. advanced a claim for R1,20,787. Held, that there is a distinction between loans which a company is empowered to

36. ——— Winding up under supervision of Court.—Order for dissolution of company.—Voluntary winding-up.—Official liquidator.—Companies Act, VI of 1882.—As a general rule a winding-up of a company under supervision of the Court should be terminated in the same way as a purely voluntary winding-up,—i.e., under sections 186 and 187 of the Companies Act, VI of 1882. Although, under section 195 of the Companies Act, VI of 1882, the Court has power to make an order dissolving a company in the course of winding up, subject to its supervision, such cases must be exceptional and can only occur when the Court has deemed it proper to carry on the winding-up under supervision in a manner such as clearly to approximate to a winding-up by the Court. The ordinary rule is the other way, and it is reasonable that it should be so; as, generally, a winding-up under supervision is not conducted under so intimate a control of the Court as to put the Court in a position to judge of the correctness of the liquidators' action and the completeness of the winding-up. So far as the Court does not interfere, a winding-up under supervision remains essentially a voluntary winding up; but the Court in a winding-up under supervision has full authority to interfere and to exercise to any extent the power which it might have exercised if an order had been made for winding-up the company by the Court. The words "official liquidator" in section 160 of the Companies Act, VI of 1882, do not include the liquidators in a winding-up under supervision. Motion

43. ——— Notice of proceeding.—Service of notices and orders.—Suit against contributories.—Contributory in India to English Company.—Last known address or place of abode.—Rule 63 of the Rules of 1862 of the High Court, Bombay.—The London, Bombay, and Mediterranean Bank, a joint-stock company registered under the English Companies Act, 1862, was ordered to be wound up by an order of the Court of Chancery in England in 1866, and by a subsequent order of the said Court made in the winding-up of the bank it was ordered that service of any notice, summons, order, or other proceeding in these matters might be effected by putting such notice, &c., into any post office, either in England or at Bombay, duly addressed to such contributories being past members according to their respective last known addresses or places of abode. By a final balance order dated 5th June 1879, it was ordered by the Court of Chancery in England that the persons named in the schedule to the said order being contributories as past members of the said bank should within four days after the service of the said order pay the amount set opposite to their names, with interest, from the 15th March 1879. The defendant's name appeared in the said schedule, and the present suit was brought to recover the sum therein appearing as due from him to the bank, viz., R3,900. The defendant denied that he had ever held shares in the plaintiffs' bank, or that he ever had notice of any of the proceedings in the winding-up. At the trial it appeared that all the various orders and notices to shareholders made in the winding-up of the bank prior to the balance order of the 5th June 1879 had been sent by post to the defendant, addressed to him at No. 36, Fanasvadi, and were all returned undelivered. It was proved that he had never resided there; but that his brother had a place of business there, and that the defendant used occasionally to go there for the purpose of attending to his brother's business. It further appeared that the residence of the defendant, as given in the register of shareholders, was Loharchall, and not 36, Fanasvadi. Held that the notices, orders, &c., prior to the order of 5th June 1879, were not so served as to make the defendant subject to that final order; that the obligation to obey the command of the Court of Chancery contained therein had not arisen as against the defendant; and that, consequently, the present suit must fail. It is a leading principle of English law, always understood except when expressly excluded, that a person proceeded against in a Court must have due notice of the proceeding; failing such notice, he is entitled to protection if the judgment or order obtained in his absence is made the ground of a suit in any Court governed by English principles. The Court of Chancery in England had not in this case so called the defendant before it as to enable it in his absence to pronounce a definitive order against him or to bind him in the Court of his domicile, although he was included in the order of the Court of Chancery. The fact that the defendant frequently attended his brother's place of business at No. 36, Fanasvadi, was not sufficient to make that place his "last known address." If there had been evidence that he had used No. 36, Fanasvadi, as an address for receiving letters, that might probably have been sufficient. It would then have been known as his address—at least as an address. The address or residence of a member of a company entered in the register of shareholders, although sufficiently ascertained for the purpose of communication from the company, is not, therefore, ascertained for a service of legal proceedings. For the purpose of such service, care must be taken to find out the last known place of abode of the alleged contributory, and to effect the substituted service there. The bank was in liquidation under a winding-up order made on 20th July 1866. The defendant pleaded discharge by insolvency, and it appeared that he had filed his schedule on 15th January 1873, and had obtained his discharge under section 60 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Statute 11 and 12 Victoria, Cap. 21) on the 15th July 1874. Held, (but doubting) that the question of the defendant's liability or non-liability to the claim made against him as a contributory could not be raised in this suit, and that, on formal evidence being given by the plaintiffs, judgment must go against the defendant. 45. ——— Transfer of assets to new company.—Companies Act (X of 1866), ss. 149-154 and 175.—Right of creditors of transferring company.—Dissentient shareholders.—Sanction of Court.—By special resolutions passed on the 3rd July 1878 and confirmed on 31st July 1878, the shareholders of the Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company (Limited) resolved that the company should be wound up voluntarily, and that all the assets of the said company should be transferred by the liquidators to a new company then intended shortly to be formed and registered in Bombay, called the New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, and that the liquidators should receive as the consideration for such transfer certain fully paid-up shares in the new company for distribution among the shareholders of the old company. The said transfer was to be made subject to a covenant on the part of the new company to perform all the agreements and to discharge all the debts and liabilities of the old company. The new company was duly formed and registered on the same day (31st July 1878), and the specified number of shares was delivered to the liquidators of the old company for distribution among the shareholders of the old company. Two of the said shareholders, J. and H., the holders of 50 and 20 shares respectively, dissented from the special resolutions in the manner provided by section 175 of the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866), and required the liquidators to purchase their interests. The matter was thereupon referred to arbitration. In the case of H. an award was made and filed, but further proceedings were stayed by order of Court. In the case of J. no award was made, and he brought a suit which was still pending against both the old and new companies and the liquidators to recover R75,000, the alleged value of his shares. In pursuance of the resolution, the liquidators of the old company handed over the assets to the new company, but no formal grant or assignment, in writing, of the said assets was executed. They remained in its possession until the 17th January 1879, on which day the said new company was ordered to be wound up by the Court. The petitioners were appointed official liquidators, and, as such, were in possession of the assets at the date of the petition. No property whatever remained in the hands of the old company, except the shares remaining to be distributed among the dissentient shareholders. The new company had discharged debts of the old company to the amount of six lakhs of rupees, and there remained debts of over three lakhs due by the old company. Until after the new company had become insolvent, no creditor of the old company had expressed his dissent from the above special resolution, or had refused to accept the new company as his debtor. On 1st March 1879 the voluntary winding-up of the old company was directed to be continued as a winding-up under the supervision of the Court. The official liquidators of the new company now presented a petition, praying that the above special resolutions might be sanctioned by the Court. Certain unsatisfied creditors of the old company opposed the petition, insisting that the sanction should be refused, except upon the condition that they should be paid in full out of the property of the old company. The two dissentient shareholders J. and H. also objected to the sanction being given unless provisions were made for the satisfaction of their claims as soon as they should be ascertained. Held that, under the special circumstances of the case, the sanction of the Court should be given to the resolutions, but subject to the value of the interest of the two dissenting shareholders being paid or adequately secured. Such order to be without prejudice to any question between the creditors of the old company and the dissenting shareholders. IN RE THE FLEMING SPINNING AND WEAVING COMPANY

S. & W. Co.* (Ld.) in the course of being wound up voluntarily proposed to transfer its business and property to another company to be called the New F. S. & W. Co., and passed a special resolution on the 3rd July, confirmed on the 31st July 1878, under section 175 of the Indian Companies Act, X of 1866, empowering the liquidators to carry out the transfer. J., a dissentient member of the old company, sent on the 5th August, and, therefore, within the seven days provided by that section, a notice expressing his dissent from such resolution; but the notice did not contain the requisition provided for by the latter part of that section, requiring the liquidators either to abstain from carrying the resolution into effect, or to purchase his interest in the company. The liquidators, however, replied on the 23rd August by offering to purchase J.'s shares, which offer being refused, they and J. entered into an agreement on the 12th October, "in pursuance of the provisions in that behalf contained in the Indian Companies Act, X of 1866," for the reference of "the dispute as to the price to be paid to the said J. for his shares in the F. S. & W. Co. (Ld.)" to two arbitrators and an umpire to be named by them. The agreement fixed a short date for the making of the award. The arbitration was entered on, but the time limited for the award having expired without any award being made, J. filed a suit, on the 28th of December, to recover the value of his shares. On the 1st March 1879, the winding-up of the F. S. & W. Co. was ordered to be continued under the supervision of the Court, and J.'s suit was at the same time stayed. J. then endeavoured to have the arbitration revived. In this he was unsuccessful, the submission not having been filed in Court, and the arbitration being held to be already dead and past revival. The suit subsequently came on to be heard, and was dismissed, on the ground that section 175 of the Act made an arbitration and an award a condition precedent to any suit. J. then called on the liquidators to nominate an arbitrator, and enter on a fresh arbitration. This the liquidators doubted whether they could legally do, and therefore they now petitioned the Court for its order and direction in the matter. They submitted that J. had never acquired the rights of a dissentient shareholder under section 175 by reason of the insufficiency of his notice, and that, in any case, one arbitration having been already entered upon and determined, J. could not now call upon them to enter on a fresh arbitration. Held, following In re Union Bank of Kingston-upon-Hull, L. R. 13 Ch. D. 808, that J.'s notice of dissent of the 5th August was in itself an insufficient notice under the provisions of section 175 of the Indian Companies Act, 1866, inasmuch as it did not contain the requisition to the liquidators required by the latter part of that section, and that, consequently, it was open to the liquidators to have treated J. as disentitled to the rights of a dissentient shareholder under that section. Held, further, that it was within the power of the liquidators to waive such informality in the notice on behalf of the company, and that they had in fact done so, and that J. was consequently entitled to the rights of a dissentient shareholder under that section. Held, further, that the rights of a dissentient shareholder, under that and the following sections, who had elected to have the value of his interest in the company decided by arbitration, were not limited to a single reference to arbitration, and were not extinguished by the expiry, without an award being made, of the time fixed by such reference for making an award; that in such a case, unless otherwise disentitled, the dissentient shareholder was entitled to a second reference to arbitration for the purpose of arriving at a definite result by means of an award, which was the object contemplated by those sections of the Act. The Privy Council will be reluctant to interfere with the discretion of Courts having jurisdiction to sanction a compromise by the liquidators of a company winding up under section 174 of the Indian Companies Act, where all the facts have been placed before the Court in India, and there is no reason to suppose that the proceedings for a compromise have been tainted with fraud. The Court had no power to sanction such an arrangement, which would be altering in a material degree the footing on which a security held by the bank stood, and interposing a new trust between it and its debtor. 52. ——— Claims on assets.—Precedence of judgment-debt due to Secretary of State.—Stay of execution of judgment-debt.—A judgment-debt due to the Crown is in Bombay entitled to the same precedence in execution as a like judgment-debt in England, if there be no special legislative provision affecting that right in the particular case. Under similar circumstances a judgment-debt due to the Secretary of State in Council for India is in Bombay entitled to the like precedence, and the reason is that such debt is vested in the Crown, and when realised falls into the State treasury. The nature of the cause of action in respect of which the judgment was recovered does not affect the right of the Crown or of the Secretary of State in Council for India to priority. As the Crown is not, either expressly or by implication, bound by the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866), and as an order made under that Act for the winding-up of a company does not work any alteration of property, such an order does not enable the Court to stay the execution of a judgment-debt due to the Crown or to the Secretary of State in Council for India. It is a principle recognised by the laws of many countries that claims of the Crown or State are entitled to precedence,—e.g., the Hindu, Roman, and French codes, the laws of Spain, the United States of America, Scotland, and England. 19. ——— Report of police officer.—Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), s. 68. —Act X of 1872, s. 142.—Knowledge.—Report of police.—Interference of High Court.—Section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to cases in which the private individual injured or aggrieved does not come forward to make a formal complaint. That section is intended for the purpose of enabling a Magistrate to take care that justice may be vindicated, notwithstanding that the persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute; and even in such cases the jurisdiction to arrest requires, for its foundation, knowledge of the fact of an offence having been committed, and that knowledge must be either personal or derived from testimony legally given. The report of the police, or any statement which falls short of an actual formal complaint, or of a statement made on oath, is not sufficient in law to give a Magistrate jurisdiction to issue his warrant. In this case, although the Magistrate had acted illegally before evidence was recorded, and had shown a want of discretion in some of the stages, the High Court refused to quash the Magistrate's order directing the prisoners to be put upon their defence, on the ground that the order had been made by a competent officer after hearing evidence which was judicially received and recorded. As the Magistrate was about to dismiss the complaint, a third party appeared, and alleged that the complaint had been made with the connivance of the accused for the purpose of fabricating evidence of his right or title to the mouzah where the complainants lived. Thereupon the Magistrate compelled the complainants to appear, took down the evidence of some of them, received a counter-complaint from the third party above mentioned, and convicted the complainants under the Penal Code, section 193, and sentenced them to imprisonment. Held, that the Magistrate ought not to have entertained the third party's petition, or compelled the complainants to go on with their case; and that, under the circumstances, the evidence given was not judicial evidence. 70. ——————— Examination of complainant.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 147.—A charge of theft was preferred by the petitioner on the 7th October 1878 before the police, who thereupon instituted enquiries which subsequently resulted in their finding the charge unproved. Meanwhile, on the 15th October, the charge was repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate of the district, who directed the complainant and his witnesses to attend on a particular day, but subsequently, without having examined them or the complainant, referred the matter to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. That officer having reported the charge to be false, the Magistrate, on the 9th November, wrote upon the police report, which had meanwhile, on the 26th October, been submitted to him, the following direction, viz., "show as false." On the 19th November a counter-prosecution under sections 211, 182, and 500 of the Penal Code was sanctioned, and eventually, on the 22nd May 1879, resulted in the petitioner being convicted. While the counter-prosecution was pending, the petitioner, on the 22nd April, applied to the Magistrate to proceed with his complaint according to law, but was informed that his complaint was dismissed. On the following day the Magistrate recorded the following order: "Dismissed in accordance with my decision recorded in the police report under section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure." Held, that the complaint had been improperly dismissed, and that the order of the Magistrate, dated 23rd April 1879, must be set aside. 6. ——— Penalty for non-fulfilment of conditions, Suit to enforce.—A suit for a kabuliat having been brought in the Revenue Court, a deed of compromise was filed in the suit, in which it was stipulated that a certain sum would be paid by the defendants to the zemindar as rent of four kanis of land, including homestead, after mutation of names; that R15-8 on account of outstanding balance and charges connected with the rents would be paid to the plaintiffs within a month; and that in default the defendants would have no right to the lands specified. The defendants having failed to fulfil the conditions, the plaintiffs executed their decree and realised from them the balance above mentioned, and having sued them for the rent obtained a decree. The plaintiffs then brought this suit to recover possession, in virtue of itmami right, of the land, on the ground of non-fulfilment of the conditions of the compromise. The first Court gave them a decree, which the lower Appellate Court reversed, holding that the deed merely imposed a penalty with a view to punctual payment. Held that, as what the defendants had to do was of a perpetually recurring nature, and no action which the Court might take would be effectual in preserving the plaintiff from being sued by the zemindar, the intention was that the terms should be strictly enforced on failure to perform the conditions, and that the defendant should be obliged to surrender the lands. The compromise was sanctioned by the Commissioner, but afterwards the manager found that he had been deceived by his servants, and that the claim had been allowed erroneously. Held that, the Court having granted a review, and the claim being proved to be exaggerated, a decree was properly given for the true amount. Gross fraud and imposition are not to be imputed upon mere suspicion, and unless the charge is proved, a party cannot be released from an agreement entered into by his own solemn act. was given to E., H., I., and C. In 1853 the Government, having purchased the estate, proposed to regrant it to the old zemindars and farmers, and a report regarding the ownership of the estate was called for. It was reported that it appeared from the statements of E., and J., the son of C., that the widows of B. and D. had made a gift of their shares to H. and I. In 1853 E., J., H., and I. were asked by the Collector in what manner they proposed to divide the estate if it were granted to them, and they replied that they would hold it in equal shares. The estate was eventually granted to these persons on payment of the arrears of revenue. Each of them contributed his quota in making such payment. In 1855 an administration-paper was framed in which they were entered, at their own request, as in possession each of equal shares. In 1864 they agreed to a partition of the shares by arbitration. These proceedings were stopped by J. advancing a claim to a moiety of the estate. In March 1867 J. sued for possession of a moiety of the share originally held by B.'s widow, then deceased, and for a declaration of his right to a moiety of the share held originally by D.'s widow. In June 1867 the parties to the suit effected a compromise, agreeing to divide the estate into four lots on certain conditions. A decree was accordingly passed in the terms of the compromise. K., J.'s son, sued in 1876, in his father's lifetime, to obtain the same relief as his father had sought in 1867, and a declaration that the arrangement effected by the compromise and the decree was ineffectual. Held that, assuming that the estate was joint until 1867, K. was, in the absence of fraud, bound by the compromise entered into by his father, and his suit was not maintainable. Assuming that the estate was held in separate shares, the shares of K.'s great-uncles descended as inheritance liable to obstruction, and K. could not have questioned his father's acts. The value of A.'s estate was uncertain, and depended on whether or not A. had been a partner in business with M., and whether or not a sum of R30,000 had been paid by M. to A. in satisfaction of all claims which A. had against M. in respect of the estate of K., a deceased brother of A. and former partner in the same business. M. having, on A.'s death, possessed himself of all the estate of A., the plaintiff brought a suit against M. in which a decree was made ordering an account to be taken of the estate of A. which had come into the hands of M. Pending such account M. died, leaving a will, by which he appointed the son of A. and another his executors, and the suit was revived against them. In their application for probate they stated that the value of M.'s estate, so far as they had been able to ascertain and were aware, was R4,41,000. Shortly after probate was granted, negotiations were entered into between the executors and the advisers of the plaintiff for a compromise, and a petition was, with the concurrence of the executors, presented by the plaintiff to the Court, asking for its sanction to the terms agreed upon by the parties, which were, that the plaintiff should receive R20,000 in full of all demands, and R5,000 for her costs of suit. This petition took, as the value of M.'s estate, the amount stated by the executors in their application for probate, and stated that the value of A.'s estate, in case the above-mentioned payment by M. was proved, would be R30,000, and in case it was not proved, then a moiety of the estate of M.; and that, considering the difficulties the plaintiff had to meet in proving her case, and with a view to put an end to further trouble, litigation, and expense, the above terms had been agreed to on her behalf. These terms of compromise were sanctioned by the Court on the 11th September 1876. Shortly afterwards, further property was discovered belonging to the estate of M. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors to set aside the compromise, alleging that the terms had been accepted by her on the faith of the representation made by the executors in their application for probate, and charging them with wilful and fraudulent concealment. There was evidence to show that some of the property subsequently discovered was such that the defendants as executors ought to have known, even if they did not, of its existence at the time of the compromise. Held, that even though the executors had no such knowledge, and there was no actual fraud, yet there was such culpable ignorance and neglect of duty on their part as to amount to fraud, and carry with it the consequences of knowledge; and as the compromise had in consequence been entered into by the parties and sanctioned by the Court under a misapprehension of material facts, the plaintiff was entitled to have the compromise set aside, and the parties restored to their rights in the former suit at the time it was effected. Per PONTIFEX, J.—In cases where the sanction of the Court is required, as where there is an infant concerned, each party is bound to see that the materials on which the sanction of the Court is asked for are unimpeachable. Per PONTIFEX, J.—Quære,—Whether in this suit, if the questions were found to arise, it would be necessary for the Court to consider whether it would be for the benefit of the minor that the compromise should be set aside. Per GARTH, *C. 1. GENERAL CASES.

1. ——— "Confession," Meaning of, as used in Evidence Act. —Evidence Act, 1872, ss. 26, 30.—The word "confession," as used in the sections of the Evidence Act relating to confessions, must not be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission which falls short of being an admission of guilt. 4. ——— Statements of accused inconsistent with each other.—The ordinary rule of taking confessions as a whole and giving the accused (in the absence of other evidence against him) the benefit of any circumstance that may appear in his favour therefrom, cannot apply to confessions which are diametrically opposed to each other; but only where the more favourable view is not absolutely inconsistent with the general tenor of the confession. QUEEN v. NITYO GOPAL DASS BYRAGEE [24 W. R., Cr., 80

5. ——— Inconsistent statements. —Credibility of.—The words actually used by an accused, who is said to have confessed, ought to be ascertained. The Court should not accept merely the conclusions at which the witnesses deposing to a confession themselves arrived from the answers which the accused gave to questions put by them. Where an accused makes two distinct statements,—the one amounting to a confession of guilt, the other repudiating guilt,—if the one statement is taken against the accused, the other also must be taken, for what it is worth, in his favour. The Court ought to weigh well the relative credibility of the two statements before it accepts the one in preference to the other. QUEEN v. SOOBJAN . . . 10 B. L. R., 332

6. ——— Confessions of prisoner in one case evidence in another.—The confessions of the prisoner in one case in which he was convicted cannot be used against him in another case, unless they are deposed to on oath, either by the person who took them down, or by some one else who heard them. IN RE MUNGER BHOOYAN . 10 W. R., Cr., 56

8. ——— Confessions of co-accused against others in their absence.—Confessions of two of several accused persons made in the absence of the others are of no weight as against the latter. Such confessions, as well as the statements of approvers, are always regarded as tainted; because, from the position occupied by the persons making them, they are not entitled to the same weight as the evidence of ordinary witnesses. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BEPIN BISWAS . . I. L. R., 10 Calc., 970

9. ——— Admissibility in evidence.—Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 149, 150.—To make the confession of a prisoner, not uttered in the presence of a Magistrate, admissible in evidence, the fact disclosed must be one which, of its own force, independently of the confession, would be admissible in evidence. QUEEN v. CHODA ATCHENAH [3 Mad., 318

2. CONFESSIONS UNDER THREAT OR PRESSURE.

10. ——— Statement admitting crime, but pleading compulsion by others.—An admission by A. and B. that the crime charged against them was committed by C. and D., and that whatever share they had in it was under compulsion, is not a confession on which any person ought to be convicted. QUEEN v. KISTO MUNDUL [7 W. R., Cr., 8

11. ——— Proof of circumstances under which confession was made.—Warning by Magistrate, Averment of.—Allegations of irregularity.—Duty of Sessions Court.—Although the averment on the record of a Magistrate by whom a prisoner is tried, that the accused, before making a confession, was warned that it was optional with him to answer the questions put to him or not, is on appeal conclusive as to the fact of such a warning having been given, it is not conclusive to show that such a confession has not been made under the influence of fear engendered by previous maltreatment, or is not otherwise valueless. Allegations made in a regular and proper manner before a Sessions Court on appeal, that a confession made by the accused before the Magistrate who tried the case was made under such circumstances as to preclude its admissibility in, or diminish its value as evidence, should receive due attention and be enquired into. A Sessions Court refusing to make such enquiry commits a grave error in law and procedure. REG. v. KASHINATH DINKAR . 8 Bom., Cr., 126

12. ——— Record of circumstances under which confession was made.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 149.—Judicial record. —To give weight to confessions of prisoners recorded under section 149, Code of Criminal Procedure, there should be a judicial record of the special circumstances under which such confessions were received by the Magistrate, showing in whose custody the prisoners were, and how far they were free agents. 13. ——— Inducement to confess.—Person in authority, Statement to.—W., a travelling auditor in the service of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, having discovered defalcations in the account of the prisoner, who was a booking clerk of the Company, went to him and told him that "he had better pay the money than go to jail," and added that "it would be better for him to tell the truth," after which the prisoner was brought before the Traffic Manager, in whose presence he signed a receipt for, and admitted having received, a sum of R826-8-0. The prisoner was subsequently put on his trial for criminal breach of trust as a servant in respect of this and of other sums. Held that the words used by W., the travelling auditor, constituted an inducement to the prisoner to confess, and that W. was a person in authority within the meaning of section 24 of the Evidence Act, and that the receipt signed by the prisoner was therefore not admissible in evidence on his trial. REG. v. NAVEOJI DADABHAI . . . 9 Bom., 358

14. ——— Illegal pressure.—Presumption.—Evidence Act, s. 24.—In the absence of evidence that a confession of an accused person has been induced by illegal pressure, it is not to be presumed that such confession was so induced. According to section 24 of the Evidence Act, a confession is inadmissible only if the Court considers it to have been induced by illegal pressure. REG. v. BALVANT v. PENDHARKAR [11 Bom., 137

15. ——— Confession made under threat for a purpose other than to extort confession.—Evidence Act, 1872, s. 24.—A prisoner was tried for wounding with intent to murder, and wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The offence was committed on the high seas on board a ship on which the prisoner was a seaman. At the trial it was proved for the prosecution that the master of the ship had sailed from Calcutta and could not be found, and the Standing Counsel thereupon tendered in evidence his deposition before the committing Magistrate, which contained an admission alleged to have been made to the deponent by the prisoner, when in custody. The Court refused to admit the portion of the deposition containing the admission to be read, as it was stated to have been made immediately after the prisoner with others had been threatened by the witness with a loaded rifle; it was immaterial that the threat was not made to extort a confession, but to suppress an attempt at mutiny. 16. ——— Confession to panchayat caused by threat.—Evidence Act, 1872, s. 24.—Proof of oral confession.—The matter before a "panchayat" was whether M. and K. had murdered B., and thereby disqualified themselves from further intercourse with the rest of their brotherhood. M. and B. made certain statements before the panchayat, which it was afterwards sought to prove against them on their trial for the murder of B. as confessions corroborating the evidence of an approver. The witnesses called to prove these "confessions" did not state specifically what was said by M. and K. before the panchayat. One witness, a member of the panchayat, said: "M. confessed and K. acquiesced." Another witness, also a member of the panchayat, said: "M. and K. were taxed with taking B.'s house, upon which both admitted having murdered him." The same witness also said: "The admissions were not taken down." It appeared that it was not till at the sixth meeting of the panchayat, and when M. and K. were threatened with excommunication from caste for life, that they made such statements. Held that, if the statements attributed to M. and K. had been actually made and assented to, and this fact had been duly proved, the provisions of section 24 of Act I of 1872 could not be pleaded against their admissibility, on the ground that such statements had been caused by such threat, for the members of the panchayat were not in authority over M. and K. within the meaning of that section, nor was there any threat made having reference to any charge against them. The statements, however, could not be accepted as sufficient in themselves to corroborate the evidence of the approver, or to support the conviction of M. and K. for the murder of B. The statements were in general terms and represented only the impression conveyed by what might have been said to the mind of the witnesses. It was always essential that the Court should know as nearly as possible what were the words used by the supposed confessors, and what were the questions or matters in regard to which they were said. It might have been that the words ascribed to M. and K., taken with the questions put and the exact subject-matter of the enquiry, did not amount to a confession of the guilt believed by the hearers to have been confessed. 17. ——— Warning by Magistrate.—Inducement to confess.—Criminal Procedure Code, Act X of 1882, s. 163.—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24.—A Deputy Magistrate, before taking down a statement from a person brought before him by the police, noted on the paper on which he was about to take down the statement the following words, which, after excluding the police officers from his presence, he had verbally addressed to the accused: "After excluding from my presence the police officers who brought him, I warned the accused that what he would say would go as evidence against him; so he had better tell the truth." Held, that the use of such language was calculated to hold out an inducement to the prisoner to confess, and that such a confession was therefore inadmissible in evidence against him. Three days afterwards he voluntarily came forward and made, on solemn affirmation, another statement, in which he retracted and contradicted what he had said in his former statement. 32. ——— Unsigned confession.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 122 and 346.—Oral evidence to prove.—The confession of an accused person, taken by a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to commit or try him, is imperfect, if not signed by the accused person or attested by his mark, and is inadmissible in evidence (sections 122 and 346, Criminal Procedure Code). The term "Preliminary enquiry" in the final clause of section 346 means such enquiries as are the subject of Chapters XIV (of enquiries and trials) and XV (of enquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session or the High Court); and, therefore, that clause does not apply to confessions recorded under section 122, which refers to an enquiry not during a trial, or one held with a view to committal, but an enquiry for the purpose of forwarding confessions, when recorded, to the Magistrate by whom the case of the accused person is enquired into or tried. This statement led to the discovery of some bones of the head of an infant, a stone stained with blood, and a knife, with which stone and knife she said that she had killed her child. Before the committing Magistrate she made the same statement. In her trial before the Sessions Judge, she admitted the birth of the child; she stated that it did not cry, and that she buried it, not knowing whether it was alive or dead. She also stated that the police constable had pressed and threatened her, and told her that if she confessed the truth nothing would happen to her. She denied having killed the child with the stone and sickle, and said that she had merely pressed it on the ground and then buried it. There was no evidence to show that the child was born alive. Held that the confession before the Magistrate was irrelevant, and that the Court was not prepared to say that the confession made before the Sessions Judge was made after the impression caused by the promise of the police constable had been fully removed, and that, looking at the fact that a promise of safety had been made, the confession was, even if accepted, of a limited character; that there was nothing to show that the child was born alive, and considering that if the child was born dead, the accused might, under fear of exposure and disgrace, have wished to conceal the body, the accused must be acquitted of murder. The weight, however, to be attached to such evidence, and the question, whether taken by itself it is sufficient in point of law to justify a conviction, is a question for the Judge. CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY IN OUDH.

1. ——— Limitation.—Release of Government rights.—Settlement.—Cause of action.—House-property in Lucknow, of which the Government had assumed possession as confiscated under the proclamations issued by Lord Canning and Sir James Outram in March 1858, was released under an order passed on the 6th July 1863, whereby the Government abandoned the confiscation and left former owners to their rights. This property had, previously to the confiscation, belonged to one M. K. Lands in Oudh confiscated under Lord Canning's proclamation were, in October 1863, directed to be settled with the heirs of M. K. In a suit brought in March 1875 by a plaintiff, who claimed a share of the house property and lands as one of the heirs of M. K. against a defendant who was an heir of M. K., and who had obtained possession of the houses and lands under the orders passed for the release of the one and the settlement of the other, the defendant pleaded that the entire property had come into her possession in 1856 under a gift from M. K., and that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. Held (first), in respect of the house property, that if the defendant was in possession at the time when the proclamations were issued, the question of limitation must be decided as if there never had been a confiscation; and (second), in respect of the lands, that no question of limitation could arise, since the suit was brought

2. ——— Lord Canning's proclamation, 1858, Effect of.—Re-grant of confiscated lands.—The effect of Lord Canning's proclamation of the 15th March 1858 was to divest all the landed property from the proprietors in Oudh and to transfer it to, and vest it in, the British Government. Consequently all who since that date claim title to such property must claim through the Government. Where a re-grant is made to a former owner, the new title will depend entirely on the terms of the re-grant; and if such re-grant is made for life only, no suit can be maintained to rectify an alleged mistake, and for declaration of an absolute title according to the tenor of the sunnuds by which the property was held under the old dynasty and prior to the confiscation. MULKA JEHAN SAHIBA v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF LUCKNOW . . I. R., 6 I. A., 63

3. ——— Property standing and registered in name of one party, but admitted to belong to another.—Registration for fiscal purposes.—In Oudh, before its annexation to the British rule, a Rajah was a talookdar of a large talook. A younger branch of his family had a separate mehal in the possession of A. wholly distinct from, and independent of, the talook the Rajah possessed as representing the elder branch of the family. The Oudh Government for fiscal purposes included A.'s mehal with the Rajah's talook, so that the Rajah as the elder branch of the family represented A.'s mehal at the Court at Lucknow, notwithstanding that A. remained in undisturbed possession as absolute owner, paying through the Rajah for his mehal a proportion of the jumma fixed on the talook. This relation between the Rajah and A. subsisted up to the time of the annexation of Oudh by the British Government. While the Government was making a settlement with the land-owners, and A. was about to apply for a distinct settlement of his mehal, he, and after him his widow, was induced by the Rajah not to do so, the Rajah in letters fully recognising A.'s absolute right to the mehal. After the suppression of the rebellion in Oudh, and the Government had recognised the talookdari tenure with its rights, a provisional settlement of the talook including A.'s mehal was made with the Rajah; but before a sunnud was granted to him, Government confiscated half his estates for concealment of arms. The Rajah suppressed the fact of the trust relation of the mehal of A., and contrived that it should be included in the half part of the estate the Government had confiscated; which mehal the Government as a reward granted to Oudh loyalists. A.'s widow brought a suit against the Government and the grantees for the restoration of the mehal and for a settlement. The Chief Commissioner held that as the Rajah was the registered owner of the mehal of A. included in his talook, it had been properly forfeited. Such finding reversed on appeal on the ground that A. was the acknowledged

4. ——— Confiscation and restoration of lands in Oudh in 1858 and of immoveables in Lucknow.—Gift.—Title.—On a claim for a share in property consisting of (a) immoveables in Lucknow, and (b) revenue-paying land in a district of Oudh, the defence was title by gift, with possession, from the former owner, a member of the family through which the plaintiff claimed. As to the immoveables in Lucknow, they having been included in the confiscation which, having followed the capture of the town in 1858, was subsequently abandoned without any intention on the part of Government to make a re-grant in favour of any person, the result in regard to the present question was the same as if no such event had occurred. The other property (b) came under the general confiscation of Oudh lands in 1858, and also was restored through subsequent settlement operations in which the final order, relating to the land in question, was to the effect that settlement should be made with the "heirs" of the previous owner. Held, that the above did not preclude the defence of exclusive title by gift; the order last mentioned, on its true construction, only designating all those who might take under and through the previous owner (deceased at the time of settlement), without excluding any claimant, save those who might claim adversely to such title. The Government did not, in the settlement which followed the confiscation, make any arbitrary or wholly new re-distribution of estates, or proceed as if the existence of previous titles (although they had been brought to an end) was to go for nothing. The enquiry in most cases was as to who would have been entitled had there been no confiscation. As to both classes of property the gift was maintained. JEHAN KADR v. AFSAR BAHU BEGUM

21. ——— Advance of money to save reputation of family.—Moral obligation.—Assignment of share in family estate.—Where a Hindu parcener voluntarily advanced money to his brother and co-parcener for the purpose of his defence against a charge of forgery, without any previous request, and merely to save the reputation of the family, the obligation, being no more than a moral obligation, was held not to be a sufficient consideration to support an assignment to the former by the latter of his share in the undivided family estate. VASUDEV BHAT v. VENKATESH SANBHAV [10 Bom., 139

22. ——— Moral consideration.—Promise to pay at majority debt during infancy.—Promise to pay barred debt.—The general rule of law is that a consideration merely moral is not valuable consideration, such as would support a promise. But there are instances of enforceable promises which formerly were referred to the now exploded principle of previous moral obligation, and which are still held to be binding, although that principle has been rejected. Amongst those instances is a promise after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy, and a promise in renewal of a debt barred by the law of limitation. The efficacy of such promises is now based upon the principle that where the consideration was originally beneficial to the party promising, and he be protected from liability by some provision of the statute or common law meant for his advantage, he may renounce the benefit of that law, and if he promise to pay the debt, he is bound by the law to perform that promise. D. executed a razinama in favour of the plaintiff on 20th August 1868 transferring certain lands to the latter. The plaintiff, after giving the usual kabuliat to the Collector, was put in possession of the lands. On the 7th April 1869 T. obtained a money decree against D., and on the 3rd July 1869 attached the lands as belonging to D. Held, that a decree of 1862, which plaintiff held against D., though time-barred, in 1868, was (being then still unsatisfied), a good consideration for D.'s razinama in 1868 in plaintiff's favour. 25. ——— Contract to pay maintenance.—Plaintiff was brought from his native place by defendant's adoptive father, D., who had no one to inherit his property, except his daughter's daughter, with a view to give her to plaintiff in marriage, and confer on him all he possessed. After marriage D.'s grand-daughter died; but owing to defendant's being adopted, plaintiff was deprived of all the cherished hopes of his wife's future inheritance. Accordingly the adoptive mother and defendant executed a moshairah-patra in plaintiff's favour, promising him, in consideration of the above facts, a monthly allowance for maintenance. The present suit was to recover a balance due of this allowance. Held that, whether the English law was applied, or the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, the deed disclosed a good and sufficient consideration for the promise to pay, and defendant was bound to pay, the stipulated allowance. 28. ——— Appointment of agent.—Remedy in case of revocation of authority. — Suit for specific performance.—The defendant, by an agreement in the nature of a letter of attorney, constituted the plaintiff and his descendants the hereditary agents of the defendant, gave him authority to collect the rents of his share in an inam village, and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held that, as between the parties and during their lifetime, the appointment was valid and binding, whether or not any valuable consideration passed; the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration for the appointment. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly, the remedy lay, under ordinary circumstances, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where, however, the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance and demanded arrears of salary, —Held that, without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise, the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, except for work and services actually rendered. 31. ——— Uncertified adjustment of decree.—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 244 (c), 258.—Contract Act, IX of 1872, ss. 2, 10, 23, 28.—The consideration for a mortgage consisted partly of the amount of two decrees held by the mortgagee, against the mortgagor. The mortgagee having sued to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagor pleaded failure of consideration as a bar to the enforcement of the mortgage. This plea was based on the allegation that the mortgagee had not certified the adjustment of the decrees as provided by section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, and they were still in force under the terms of that section. Per DUTHOIT, J., that the failure of the mortgagee to certify the adjustment of the decrees did not constitute a failure of consideration because he did not covenant to certify such adjustment, and it was not in fact necessary for him to do so; because he could not seek execution of the decrees on the ground that, though unsatisfied, they were still in force under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, without becoming liable to penalties; and because, if the mortgagor considered the entering up of the adjustment of the decrees to be imperative, he had his remedy by application to the Court in the terms of section 258. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the adjustment of a decree out of Court, if never certified to the Court, is, under section 258, ineffectual only so far as the execution of the decree is concerned; that there is nothing in the Contract Act to make such an adjustment invalid as the consideration for an agreement; that an agreement founded on such consideration may be enforced without defeating the objects of section 258; and that consequently there was, in respect of the amount of the decrees, valid consideration for the mortgage. Gunamani Dasi v. *Pran Kishori Dasi, 5 B. Under the treaty made in 1839 between Her Majesty the Queen and the Sultan of Muscat, British subjects are liable to be sued in the British Consular Courts at Zanzibar by Americans as being subjects of another Christian nation; and by convention with the Rao of Cutch, made with the acquiescence of the Sultan of Zanzibar, natives of Cutch, having been subjected to the British Consular Court in the same manner as if they were British subjects, may be sued by Americans and others in that Court. When the British Consul at Zanzibar has permitted persons, who have not been registered as under British protection, to bring and continue suits in his Court, that circumstance must be accepted as a sufficient indication that they have excused to his satisfaction their neglect to register under article 30 of the Order in Council of 9th August 1866. Quære,—Whether Statute 39 and 40 Victoria, Cap. 46, deals with the order in Council of the 9th August 1866, except so far as that order relates to the slave trade. As regards the High Courts in India, the remedies provided by section 136 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) in cases of disobedience to an order of Court may be regarded as cumulative. They subject the offender to particular liabilities for his contumacy, but do not extinguish the Court's power of constraining him to obedience. The offence of contempt of Court, and the powers of the High Courts to punish it, are the same in such Courts as in the superior Courts in England. Those powers, which formed part of the common law, were conferred upon the Supreme Courts, when they were established in the Presidency Towns. The Penal Code does not provide against a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, and neither in chapter XXI "of Defamation," nor elsewhere, provides for the punishment of a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel reflecting upon a Judge in his judicial capacity, or in reference to his conduct in the discharge of his public duties. Because the publisher can be punished for "defamation" under the Code, it does not follow that he cannot be punished summarily by the High Court for a contempt of Court.

He can be so punished with fine, or imprisonment, or both. The provisions of section 5 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, relating to the procedure under which "all offences under the Indian Penal Code," and "all offences under any other law," are punished, do not include a contempt of the High Court committed by the publication of a libel out of Court, when the Court is not sitting, although such contempt may include defamation. Such a contempt is more than mere defamation, and is of a different character. The jurisdiction of the High Court to commit for contempt has not been affected by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. By the common law every Court of Record is the sole and exclusive judge of what amounts to a contempt of Court. 2. PENAL CODE, SECTION 174.

1. ——— Penal Code, s. 174.—Non-attendance in obedience to a summons.—Summons what it should contain.—Omission to state time and place of attendance.—A summons should be clear and specific in its terms as to the title of the Court, the place at which, the day, and the time of the day when, the attendance of the person summoned is required, and it should go on to say that such person is not to leave the Court without leave, and, if the case in which he has been summoned is adjourned, without ascertaining the date to which it is adjourned. Where a summons did not mention the place at which, or the time of the day when, the attendance of the person summoned was required,—Held, that such person could not lawfully be punished under section 174 of the Penal Code for non-attendance in obedience to such summons. 1. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.

1. ——— Printed form of contract.—Writing and printing.—Sale of goods to arrive.—The defendants contracted to purchase certain piece goods from the plaintiffs, who were dealers in those goods. The contract of sale was written out on one of the printed forms of the plaintiffs' firm, which forms contained in print the words "now in course of landing or in the said godowns" and "now on board ship." As a matter of fact, well known to both parties, the goods contracted for were neither in the godowns nor on board ship. Held that, under the circumstances, the printed words above set out formed no part of the contract entered into between the parties. 5. ——— Duration of contract.—Effect of recital in regard to control over operative words.—The parties during several years had transactions consisting of the deliveries of produce by the defendants to the plaintiff's agent, under advances, upon separate contracts, specifying prices, and of consignments by the defendants through the plaintiffs. A "purchase account" and an "interest account" kept between them resulted in a "general account;" and in 1872 a large sum was due thereon to the plaintiffs, to whom, in 1873, the defendants sent letters mortgaging property with instruments of title accompanying. In the beginning of 1874 the parties entered into a written agreement, which described the balance due in respect of previous advances as the "block account," comprising also an "interest account," and the transactions proceeded. The intention was shown that the advances should be liquidated "by returns," but the only date mentioned from which an inference could be drawn as to the intended duration of the arrangement between the parties shew at 30th June 1875. In this suit, brought in December 1875, it was contended that the right construction of the agreement of 1874 required that it should continue to subsist (unless rescinded either by mutual agreement, or on breach of its stipulations by one party justifying its rescission by the other) until the liquidation of the balance by returns; at all events, as regarded the "block account." In order to the working of an agreement for a liquidation in such a way, it would have been necessary to imply obligations, for which no express provision had been made; nothing, for instance, having been fixed as to the extent, or duration, of the business, or as to the rates at which produce was to be offered or accepted. Held, that such provisions could not now be supplied, and that the stipulations as to the "block account" were binding only during the continuance of the arrangement for the conduct of the business by the parties, such arrangement being terminable at will, after the 30th June 1875. The letters of 1873, and the documents of title deposited with them, were held to constitute a security for the general balance due from the defendants to the plaintiffs, and not only a security for advances on certain of the contracts referred to in a paragraph in the nature of a recital; for the latter was not necessarily repugnant to the wider construction, and the operative words were wide enough to apply to all the transactions between the parties. The construction of an ambiguous stipulation in a written agreement may be governed or qualified by a recital; but, if the intention is clearly to be collected from the operative words, that intention is not to be defeated or controlled because it may go beyond what is expressed in the recital. 6. ——— Extras not mentioned in contract.—Allowance for extras.—The plaintiff, in answer to an application to him by the defendant for an estimate of the cost of some surveying tents, replied:—"We send you, as requested, the prices of tents, flags, and poles, &c.," enclosing a memorandum of prices in which there was no allusion to "flies" for the tents. It appeared that no mention had been made about the "flies" in a conversation which subsequently took place between the parties during the progress of the manufacture of the tents. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover an extra price on account of "flies." 10. ——— Delivery by instalments.—Tender.—Abandonment of excess.—Sale of goods.—A contract made between the plaintiffs and the defendant stipulated for the delivery to the defendant of 7,500 bags of Madras Coast castor seed, which were to be shipped "per steamers," and then stated that shipment of 2,500 bags was to be made in December. On the 12th December 1,690 bags arrived by Steamer Shahjehan and notice in writing was given to the defendant, who requested that the delivery might be postponed owing to his not having godown room. On the 14th December the defendant refused to take the 1,690 bags, on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 2,500 bags, but only the whole at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 2,500 bags which was refused, and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1,690 bags. On the 17th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags, the balance of the 2,500 of the December shipment, were due on the 18th, and they did arrive on the 19th, but were refused by the defendant on the same ground as before, and they were accordingly resold by the plaintiffs. Held, that according to the terms of the contract there was a legal and proper tender of the December shipment by the plaintiffs, and that the defendant having committed a breach of the contract in not accepting the bags, the plaintiffs were justified in reselling them at once and suing for damages. 11. ——— Delivery in whole of November on seven days' notice from buyer.—Breach of contract.—A contract for delivery by the defendants to the plaintiff of 1,000 bags of ginger stated, that "delivery was to be taken and given in the whole of November on seven days' notice from the buyer." On the 5th November, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants requiring delivery to be given "within seven days;" and again on the 11th, that he was prepared to take delivery on the following day. On the 12th, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff, stating that they would give delivery on the 28th, 29th, and 30th November. On the 15th, the plaintiff gave notice that he considered the contract at an end. In a suit for damages for non-delivery,—Held (affirming the decision of the Court below), that the words "on seven days' notice from the buyer" were intended to give the buyer the right of fixing the particular time in November at which the delivery was to commence, and that the defendants were, therefore, bound to commence delivery on the expiration of the seven days' notice. 12. ——— Non-acceptance.—Breach of contract.—The plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant to deliver sulphur, to be imported by the ship Michael Angelo. No sulphur arrived by the Michael Angelo consigned to the plaintiff, and he procured it elsewhere, but the defendant refused to accept it. In an action for non-acceptance,—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below (MARKBY, J., 2 B. L. R., S. N., 9), that the defendant was not bound to accept sulphur not imported by the Michael Angelo. BIHARI LAL v. MADHUSUDUN KUNDU

13. ——— Breach of contract.—"Ex a certain ship."—By a contract entered into between the plaintiffs and defendant, the plaintiffs agreed to sell certain goods ex a specific ship to the defendant, the goods to be taken delivery of within forty-five days, and ten days to be allowed for inspection, and claiming allowance for any damaged goods, the defendant to take the risk of damage from the date of the contract. The period for taking delivery and for inspection dated from the 13th May. The plaintiffs did not receive the whole of the goods until 16th of June, and therefore were not ready to perform their contract by submitting them for inspection within the specified time: the defendant did not call upon them to do so. In a suit for breach of the contract by the defendant in not accepting the goods,—Held, that the plaintiffs not being in a position to complete the contract, no cause of action had arisen. Held, on appeal, that the goods ought to have been ready for inspection within the ten days stipulated, and the plaintiffs not having shown that they were ready and willing so to perform the contract, had no right of action, notwithstanding that the defendant never, in fact, called on them to deliver the goods for inspection. The words "ex a certain ship" must be taken to mean that the goods are really landed, and not in course of being landed, and therefore, independently of the question of the necessity on the part of the plaintiffs to show their readiness to perform their part of the contract, the defendant was not bound to take goods on board ship, in respect of which, if the contract were binding upon him, he would have been found to take the risk of any damage or loss to the goods on board ship, or in the course of landing. 14. ——— Agreement to share costs of litigation to be prosecuted to its furthest limits.—Failure on advice to appeal to Privy Council.—Plaintiffs having sought to recover from defendants their share of the costs of certain litigation which plaintiffs had set agoing at the instance of defendant's father, who was jointly interested with plaintiffs in certain property in suit, but who wanted the means to prosecute the litigation for its recovery, and who, accordingly, executed an ikrarnamah agreeing to share the costs of the necessary litigation proportionably with plaintiffs, provided they furnished the funds for prosecuting that litigation to the furthest limits; and the said litigation having terminated adversely to the interests of both plaintiffs and defendants, without any appeal having been preferred to the Privy Council, and defendants having repudiated all responsibility for costs on the ground of default in prosecution of litigation to the furthest possible limit, —Held that, as plaintiffs had merely undertaken to furnish the means for carrying on the litigation, but had not actually undertaken the conduct of that litigation, and as it was not in evidence that defendants had wished to go up to the Privy Council, and to this end had made a demand on, but had been frustrated by, plaintiffs, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover proportionate costs in the concerted litigation, with costs in the present suit proportioned to the amount thus obtained by them. The lower Courts in this case found that it had not been proved, either that the pleaders had advised, or that defendant's father had agreed, that there should be an appeal to the Privy Council. 15. ——— Collateral agreement.—Contract Act, ss. 21, 65.—Mistake of law.—Agreement to secure repayment of loan, collateral to primary obligation.—By an agreement in writing, defendants, trustees of a temple, in consideration of an advance of money which they represented was required to pay off debts incurred for the benefit of the temple, granted to plaintiff a lease of the right to manage the temple lands, and plaintiff promised that he would repay himself out of the profits to be derived from the lands, and that neither the defendants nor their family property should be made liable for the debt.

In a suit by plaintiff against a tenant of the temple lands, this lease was held to be void for illegality. Defendants subsequently resumed management and plaintiff sued them to recover the money advanced by him. It was found that the agreement was entered into by both parties under a mistake as to the validity of the lease:—Held that, assuming section 65 of the Contract Act was not intended to vary the rule, that a mistake of law is no ground for relieving a party from his own contract, plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover on the ground that the agreement which provided for repayment was collateral and had failed. An agreement that an obligation which is contracted shall be discharged in some particular mode is collateral to the primary contract which created the obligation, though the two agreements may be mixed up in one contract. KRISHNAN v. SANKARA VARMA . . I. L. R., 9 Mad., 441

16. ——— Agreement not to alienate.—Mortgage.—Plaintiff sued, as managing trustee of a choultry, to set aside certain mortgages of the lands with which it was endowed, made by the second, third, and fourth defendants to the sixth and seventh defendants, and for an injunction to compel payment of kist, which had been allowed to fall into arrears, contrary to the provisions of the machalka sued upon. The defendants pleaded that the mortgages made were not in violation of the provisions of the machalka. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Civil Judge considered the provisions —"Moreover, we are only entitled to cultivate the said four villages and to maintain the said choultry with the income therefrom as above stated; and we have no right to alienate the said lands by sale," &c., —fatal to the right to mortgage advanced by the defendants one to five. Accordingly he reversed the decree appealed from. Held, by SCOTLAND, C. J., that the reasonable construction to be put upon that portion of the razinama relating to alienation was that the villages were not to be alienated so as to deprive the choultry of the receipt of the portion of the produce fixed by the razinama for its support: that the security of the cultivation of the land and the application of the fixed portion of the produce to the maintenance of the choultry was all that the parties intended to effect: that there was nothing in the record to show that the payment of that fixed portion had been rendered less certain by the transfer of the villages to the mortgagees: that, consequently, the beneficial interest of the plaintiff, as trustee under the razinama, was not impaired, and the mortgages were not made in violation of the provisions of the machalka. Per HOLLOWAY, J.—That the right set up was based upon a purely capricious exercise of the plaintiff's will, in the effectuation of which he had no conceivable interest; that contractual words seeking to create a right of this sort are ineffective to create it, and that, consequently, the alienations by mortgage were wrongly declared void. 17. ——— Agreement to give refusal of purchase.—Contract between purchaser from Hindu widow and reversioners.—Breach of contract in leasing to others.—W. purchased an estate from a Hindu widow. On her death the reversioners brought a suit to set aside the sale and recover possession. Upon this W. entered into an ikrar or undertaking, in which he agreed, on consideration of their desisting from the suit, that he would remain in possession as long as he pleased, and when he had occasion to sell the property would give them the refusal. Several years after, W. entered into negotiations with third parties for the sale of the concern to which the property was annexed, but not being able to come to terms with them, he broke off the negotiation, and the property was subsequently leased to others. Upon this the reversioners sued to have the property conveyed to them. Held, that W.'s promise not to alienate the property, coupled with the promise that he would personally retain possession, amounted to an undertaking which was violated by what had taken place. Plaintiffs were therefore entitled to the conveyance sought for upon payment of the price. RAM NATH SEN LUSHKUR v. RASH MOHUN MOOKERJEE . 24 W. R., 214

18. ——— Contract to cultivate indigo.—By a contract for the cultivation of indigo the defendant agreed, in consideration of certain payments, to prepare the land, sow the seeds that should be supplied, reap the crop, &c. And it was stipulated that in case the defendant should neglect to cultivate the lands, the amlah of the factory might cultivate them and deduct the expense from the money payable to the defendant,—Held, that it was not obligatory upon the plaintiff to enter upon the lands and cultivate them on default by the defendant. 19. ——— Construction of agreement.—Right of suit to recover advances.—A ryot took advances from an indigo factory, on condition that he was not to repay any portion of the same until the expiration of the agreement, and even then he was not to be bound to repay the money in cash, but had the option, either to pay the same in cash or continue to cultivate the land with indigo, and deliver the plants grown thereon until the whole of the advances were satisfied. Held, that an action would not lie for a refund of the balance in consequence of the plaintiff closing the factory before the expiration of the contract. 21. ——— Intention to execute more formal contract.—Final agreement, Effect of.—Where two parties have come to a final agreement, the mere fact that at the time of their doing so they intended to embody the terms of such agreement in a formal instrument does not make such agreement less binding on them. WHYMPER AND COMPANY v. BUCKLE AND COMPANY . I. L. R., 3 All., 469

22. ——— Intention to make more formal contract.—Binding effect of preliminary agreement.—Agreement to adjust suit, suit for damages for breach of.—Even where formalities in the embodiment of contracts are at the option of the parties, there may be a concluded and binding contract, although there is an intention to put its terms into a more formal shape. The existence of such intention is evidence that neither party was to be bound until the intended formalities have been complied with. But when a sale, so as to pass an interest, requires certain formal steps, and nothing turns upon the intention of the parties, no inference against a concluded agreement can be drawn from the non-completion of formalities which are not of their selection. The parties to a suit executed a written agreement, which was duly registered, whereby the plaintiff agreed to accept the property of the defendant, specified in the agreement, in adjustment of the said suit. The agreement was not recorded under section 98, Act VIII of 1859. Plaintiff proceeded with his suit, obtained a decree, and sold the property mentioned in the agreement, in execution of the said decree. The sale-proceeds being insufficient to satisfy the decree, other property belonging to the defendant was attached and sold for R23,360. In a suit for damages brought by the defendant,—Held, that the agreements to withdraw the previous suit and to accept the properties of the present plaintiff in discharge of the claim were concluded agreements, and that, therefore, the present plaintiff was entitled, with interest, to the sum which property, not mentioned in the agreement, fetched at the sale under the decree obtained by the defendant. It was found that the ship was unseaworthy at the time of sailing, and that the defendants had placed part of the goods on board. Held, that it is a condition precedent that a vessel shall be in a proper state to take the goods on board for the purpose of the particular voyage; or in such a state that she may be made fit for the voyage

The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before the 1st December 1881. The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant, these contracts being on terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. In a suit to recover damages for breach of the contract by the defendant in not accepting the goods,—Held, that the stipulation not to sell the goods to others itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept the goods, and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages. A portion of the jute was not delivered, and this suit having been brought against the Eastern Bengal Railway Company for the value thereof, the Small Cause Court Judge was disposed to dismiss the suit without further enquiry, on the ground of want of privity between plaintiff and defendant. Held, that it was premature for the Judge to say that the suit could not lie against defendant without proceeding with the further investigation of the case, and that although plaintiff might have a remedy against the India General Steam Navigation Company, it by no means followed that he had none against the defendant company also. In an action brought by H. & Co. against C. & Co. for non-performance of the contract contained in the sold note, the Supreme Court at Calcutta was of opinion that the sold note alone formed the contract, and found for the plaintiffs. Held, by the Privy Council on appeal (reversing that decision), that the transaction was one of bought and sold notes, and that the circumstances attending C.'s alteration of the sold note, and affixing his initials, were not sufficient to make that note alone a binding contract: and that there being a material variation in the terms of the bought note with the sold note, they together did not constitute a binding contract. On the last day for delivery plaintiff produced allotment receipt papers, all bearing date prior to the date of the contract, for the numbered shares contracted to be sold in both companies. The Alliance Financial papers were endorsed by the original allottees; but neither transfers nor applications for transfers signed by the original allottees were offered, nor had any such been executed, although the Corporation had opened transfer-books long before. Of the Mazagon Reclamation receipts, nine were endorsed by the allottees, one had no endorsement, and over the allottee of it and of another receipt plaintiffs had no power to enforce delivery. 50. ——— Wagers on price of opium at opium sales.—Stat. 8 & 9 Vict., c. 109.—By the common law of England, in force in India, an action may be maintained on a wager, although the parties had no previous interest in the subject-matter on which it is laid, if such wager be not against the interest or feelings of third parties, does not lead to indecent evidence, and is not contrary to public policy. The mere circumstance that a wager concerns the public revenue, or creates a temptation to do a wrong, will not render it illegal. A wager upon the average price which opium should fetch at the next Government sale at Calcutta, the plaintiffs having to pay the defendants the difference between such price and a sum named, per chest, and the defendants having to pay the plaintiffs the difference between such price and the sum named, if the price should be above that sum, is not an illegal wager or contrary to public policy, though the proceeds of the opium sold at Calcutta formed part of the Government revenue. The plaintiff deposited ₹100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January 1883 (i.e., four days before the contract) at ₹25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled, and sought to recover the deposit of ₹100, with interest. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Broach, being of opinion that the contract was in its nature a sutta, or wagering contract, rejected the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, to set aside the lower Court's decision. Held that, in the first instance, the plaint, as framed, not disclosing any cause of action, ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract or should have contained an allegation of fraud, on the defendant's part, inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance, that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact," would not, under section 22 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), have made the contract voidable. Held, also, that, if the contract was really a wager, the deposit could not be recovered under section 65 of the Contract Act, as its nature must from the first have been known to the parties. To an agreement, so known to be void, section 65 does not apply. If the contract was in the intention of both parties a wager, the suit would be barred by section

1 of Bombay Act III of 1865 which, though it formed a part of Act XXI of 1848, which is repealed by the Contract Act, is not, being a special Act, applicable to the Bombay Presidency, itself repealed. It must be read with section 30 of the Contract Act. Held, also, that, to constitute a wager, the transaction between the parties must "wholly depend on the risk in contemplation," and "neither party must look to anything but the payment of money on the determination of an uncertainty." But if one of the parties has "the event in his own hands" the transaction is not a wager. If the plaintiff's real contention was that defendant was aware of a declaration of dividends, at ₹25 per share, and by keeping plaintiff in ignorance of the facts induced him to enter into a wagering agreement for payment of differences at a contract rate of ₹37 per share, then to a suit for the recovery of the deposit made to the defendant with reference to such an agreement, Bombay Act III of 1885 has no application. 73. ———— Power of Government in its executive capacity.—It is not within the power of a Court of law, in the face of the contracts originally made between the mula-vargdars (superior holders) and their mul-gainidars (permanent tenants), to relieve the former from the hardship caused to them by reason of the enhancement, by Government, of the assessment on their lands to an amount exceeding or equal to the rent received by them (mula-vargdars) from the mul-gainidars. It is doubtful whether Government, in its executive capacity, has any more power than Courts of law to interfere with contracts made between private persons. 80. ———— Execution of deed obtained by misrepresentation.—Cancellation of signature.—Contract Act, ss. 18 and 19.—Breach of duty.—Ordinary diligence.—The firm of Nicol and Company having suspended payment, a general meeting of creditors was convened, at which it was unanimously resolved that the business of the firm should be wound up by voluntary liquidation under the supervision of a committee; and that the winding up should be conducted by two trustees under the supervision and control of the said committee. At a subsequent meeting of the creditors the above resolutions were confirmed, and it was further resolved that a composition-deed should be prepared in pursuance of the terms of the above resolutions. The adoption of this last resolution was strongly pressed upon the meeting by the solicitor for the insolvent firm on the ground that the mode of procedure therein proposed was proposed solely in the interests of the creditors. He entirely repudiated the idea that the members of the firm were to obtain any benefit by the proposed measure. No mention was made at either of the meetings of any release to be given to the parties. The plaintiffs were creditors of Nicol and Company, and R., S., and B. were their respective agents in Bombay. R., S., and B. attended the said meetings on the plaintiffs' behalf, and were appointed members of the committee of supervision and control. A few days after the last-mentioned meeting, M., one of the partners of the insolvent firm, called upon R., who at the time was deeply engaged in pressing an important business. M. produced a deed which had been prepared by the solicitors of the firm, and which contained a clause by which the creditors, in consideration of the assignment of the estate to trustees, released and discharged the members of the firm from all claims. M. was aware of the existence of the release in the deed. He asked R. to execute the deed, stating that it was "the trust deed." R. requested M. to leave the document, saying that he would go over it and return it in the course of the day. M. then earnestly pressed him to execute the document at once, stating that it was of the utmost importance that no time should be lost, as the native creditors were coming to his office, and that it was necessary that all the members of the committee of supervision should sign first. R. objected to sign the document without reading it, and M. thereupon led him to suppose that the deed only carried out what was agreed to at the creditors' meeting. Upon the faith of that assurance, R. executed the deed on behalf of the first plaintiffs in the belief that it was nothing more than an assignment to trustees for the benefit of creditors. Subsequently, on the same day, M. took the deed to S., and asked him to sign. S. was also engaged in pressing business, and asked M. to leave the deed for perusal; but M. gave the same reason for not doing so that he had given to R., and further stated that R. had signed, and that he (M.) hoped that S. would also sign. S. glanced at the deed, and being assured by M. that it was in order, thereupon on the faith of that assurance, and believing that the deed was nothing more than an assignment of the estate to the trustees, executed the deed on behalf of the second plaintiffs without reading it. M. on the same day took the deed, with the signature of R. and S. attached thereto, to B., who was also engaged in pressing business, and asked him to sign it. After some conversation, B. said to M.: "The deed, then, is merely an assignment of the firm's effects for the creditors," and M. replied in the affirmative. B. then on behalf of the third plaintiffs executed the deed without reading it, believing it to be merely an assignment of the estate to the trustees. On the 15th October, R. and B. heard that the deed contained a release by the creditors to the debtors, and on the 16th October S. was also for the first time informed of it. On the 16th October R. and S. wrote a letter to M., repudiating their signatures, and refusing to be bound by the deed; and on the 26th October, B. caused a similar letter to be written to M.'s solicitor. The plaintiffs sued to have the signatures of their said agents and managers severally cancelled, and to have it declared that the deed was not binding on the plaintiffs. Held that, having regard to what passed at the meetings of creditors, the deed, so far as it operated as a release, was a different deed from that which R., S., and B. either intended to execute, or thought they were executing when they affixed their signatures, and that not having read the deed, but having trusted to M. to inform them as to its contents, their signatures could not be held to be a consent to its contents, and that, therefore, so far as the deed operated as a release, their signatures were null. Held, also, that under the special circumstances of the case it became the duty of M. to communicate to R., S., and B. the existence of the release, and that not having done so he committed a breach of duty such as is contemplated by clause 2 of section 18 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Held, also, that, under the circumstances, R., S., and B. had not the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence, and that the exception to section 19 of the Contract Act was not applicable. half to the defendants. If, at the end of the term, any balance remained due to the plaintiff, the defendants were to pay it with interest at 18 per cent. If the defendants failed to give the ijara, they agreed to pay the amount borrowed with interest at 6¼ per cent. per mensem. The plaintiff advanced the money and obtained a receipt therefor from the defendants. The defendants failed to give the plaintiff the ijara. In a suit brought to recover the sum lent by the plaintiff with interest, the first Court gave a decree for the plaintiff for the sum claimed with interest at the higher rate stipulated for in the ikrar, viz., 75 per cent. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court,—Held, that, in the absence of evidence of any fiduciary relation between the parties, of any imposition or misrepresentation on the part of the plaintiff, or any want of capacity on the part of the defendants, and there being nothing in the circumstances which led to the execution of the ikrar to show that there was any constructive fraud on the part of the plaintiff, or any undue advantage taken by him, the contract was not one which the Court would set aside as being unreasonable, inequitable, or oppressive in character. The account, on a cadjan, was for R315 payable with 12 per cent. interest within fifteen days, and in default plaintiff to be paid, on 14th November 1876, paddy for the amount due calculated at the rate of 4 annas 7 pies per para. Immediately after the execution of this agreement the price of rice rose, the defendant did not pay within the fifteen days, and in the plaint in this suit the price of rice was calculated at 8 annas per para. Held, that the bargain was unconscionable. Under the Contract Act, section 74, in a case falling within its terms only reasonable compensation could be given, which in the present case would be interest at a somewhat high rate. The contract in effect was that, if the principal with 12 per cent. were not paid on 22nd September, double the amount should be payable on the 15th November. their parts in payment of a moiety of the annual produce, or the performance of their other covenants, and notwithstanding full payment of the principal, to continue for fifteen years to pay the half produce of the lands to the mortgagees. Held (reversing the decrees of both the Courts below), that the deed of mortgage should only stand as security for the payment of the principal sum of ₹300, and interest at 9 per cent., and in all other respects should be set aside as inequitable, fraudulent, and grossly oppressive. Held, also, that if in execution of the reversed decrees the lands had been made over to the mortgagees as purchasers, they should be restored to the mortgagors, and that the rents, profits, and produce received by the mortgagees while in possession should be set off on account against the said principal sum and interest, and that the balance should be paid by the party against whom the same might be found. Mere inadequacy of consideration, unless it be so great as to amount to evidence of fraud, is not sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, or refusing to decree specific performance of it. But inadequacy of consideration when found in conjunction with any such other circumstances as suppression of true value of property, misrepresentation, fraud, surprise, oppression, urgent necessity for money, weakness of understanding or even ignorance, is an ingredient which weighs powerfully with a Court of Equity in considering whether it should set aside contracts, or refuse to decree specific performance of them. size 40 by 28 inches, "the defendants to have the option of taking bags of a longer or shorter length at proportionate prices, duly giving a fortnight's notice to the plaintiffs, delivery to be taken in August 1870." The defendants, after taking delivery of 11,600 of the bags, found that the bags tendered were mixed in size, some being longer and some being shorter than the contract size, and refused to take delivery of the remainder. In an action for breach of contract in not accepting the bags, the Court below found on the evidence that out of 2,000 bags which were examined, 100 were short by from a quarter to half an inch, but that the bags which were really short were very few out of a large quantity which came up to contract size, and held, therefore, that there had been a substantial performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Court found that the parties did not contemplate any large margin of difference in the size of the bags, and that the proportion of those which differed was large enough to justify the defendants in refusing to take delivery, and held that the tender of such bags by the plaintiffs was not a substantial performance of the contract. 103. ———— Part acceptance of goods by defendant not according to contract.—Rate payable for such goods.—The defendants contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs "2,000 maunds of fresh, clean, and good up-country indigo seed, guaranteed growth of season 1870-71, at ₹11 per maund, to be delivered to the defendants' agent at Hajipore in all February next. In part performance of this contract, the plaintiffs delivered, and the defendants' agent at Hajipore accepted 865 maunds of seed, no objection as to quality being then taken. But when the remainder of the seed was tendered in February the defendants refused to accept it on the ground that it was not according to contract. At the same time and upon the same grounds, they refused to pay the contract price for the seed already accepted, and tendered instead the market price at the time of delivery. In an action to recover the contract price of the 865 maunds delivered, and damages for loss on resale of the remainder of the seed, the Judge of the Court below found on the facts that the seed was not "seed of the growth of 1870-71" as far as it was reasonably possible to procure it; and that though there was evidence to show that seed of the previous season, if of good quality and in good preservation, was occasionally mixed with the new seed, and that seed so mixed had been accepted as a performance of contracts for 1870-71, yet there was no evidence that, under such contracts as the present, the seller was by custom at liberty to mix seeds of two crops so as to bring the sample up to an average quality; and, further, that a custom, so directly at variance with the express terms of the contract, could not, if proved, be allowed to prevail. Held, also, that the defendants had waived any objection to the 865 maunds which must therefore be taken as a good delivery pro tanto under the contract, and must be paid for accordingly.—Held on appeal (affirming the decision of the Court below), that the plaintiffs had not delivered seed according to the contract; but reversing the decision of the Court below) that the contract was a contract for the delivery of the entire quantity of 2,000 maunds; and that the plaintiffs could only recover for the 865 maunds as on a new contract arising at the time when the seed was accepted; such contract being to pay for the seed according to its value, and not according to the rate stipulated for the 2,000 maunds. 104. ———— Endorsement by parties on original contract.—Transfer of contract.—Action for non-acceptance.—On the 16th April 1878 the plaintiffs contracted to purchase from F. M. & Co., of Bombay, at ₹18 per ton, "the entire cargo of coal per 'Culzean' amounting to 900 tons or thereabouts." On 18th April the plaintiffs transferred the contract to the defendants and one Nanabhai Bomansha, and the following endorsement was made: —"The contract to be transferred to Messrs. Tullockchand and Shapurji and Nanabhai Bomansha at ₹20¼. For C. H. B. Forbes and Selves, W. Tennent & Co." Underneath this endorsement the transferees wrote as follows:—"Accepted 450 tons at ₹20¼ per ton. Nanabhai Bomansha. Accepted 450 tons at ₹20¼ per ton. Tullockchand and Shapurji." The Culzean arrived at Bombay with a cargo of 2,167 tons of coal, on board of which it appeared that 1,300 tons had been shipped to the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company and 867 tons to the order of the shippers. F. M. & Co. were agents at Bombay for the shippers. The defendants refused to take delivery of the coal, on the ground that the contract transferred to them and Nanabhai Bomansha was a contract for an "entire cargo." The plaintiffs sued the defendants for non-acceptance, contending that there had been no transfer to defendants and Nanabhai Bomansha of the original contract, but a new several contract for separate portions of the cargo. Held, that the joint effect of the endorsement and the original contract was that the defendants agreed to purchase 450 tons, part of an entire cargo of 900 tons, or thereabouts; that, inasmuch as the cargo of the Culzean consisted of 2,167 tons, the defendants were not bound to accept any part of such cargo, and that the suit was not maintainable. Borrowman v. *Drayton, L. tiffs sent the defendant a letter reminding him of the contract and requesting him to take delivery. On receipt of this letter the defendant put the matter into the hands of V. The plaintiff had then no cotton of the specific kind to deliver, nor did the letter refer to any particular bales. At 11-30 o'clock A.M., on March 30th, the plaintiffs sent the defendants a letter enclosing a sampling order directed to an employé of Messrs. H. and S., on whose premises the bales referred to in the order were lying. V., on behalf of the defendant, got samples taken of the cotton and examined them, but without reference on that day to any standard. He then, however, conceived doubts as to the quality of the cotton and expressed his doubts to the plaintiff in the evening of that day. On 31st March the plaintiffs sent the defendant a delivery order enclosed in a letter from their solicitors calling on the defendant to attend with his surveyor at 1 P.M. on that day to survey the cotton, as otherwise an ex parte survey would be held. This letter reached the defendant at 11-30 o'clock A.M., and was given by him to V. at noon of the same day. V. applied to M. to attend as surveyor, but M. was unable to do so. The plaintiffs had an ex parte survey held by Messrs. C. and B. at 1 P.M. and they pronounced the cotton, samples of which were submitted to them, to be "fully good fair Kishli cotton." While this survey was going on, the defendant was on the Cotton Green, but declined to attend, saying that V. and his surveyor were coming. Shortly afterwards V. did come, and subsequently wrote a letter to plaintiffs in the defendant's name, stating that the cotton was not of the description contracted to be sold by them, and asking for a survey. This letter reached the plaintiffs at 2-19 o'clock P.M. After this there was a discussion between plaintiffs and defendant and V. On that afternoon (the 31st March) the plaintiff's solicitors sent a letter to the defendant stating the result of the survey and requiring him to take delivery. This was answered by a letter of next day (April 1st) from the defendant's solicitors denying that the cotton was of proper quality or that proper notice of the survey had been given, alleging that the defendant had that morning attended with his surveyor and asked leave to survey the cotton which had been refused, and stating that the contract must be treated as cancelled. The cotton was sold by auction on April 5th. The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover ₹1,631-1-11 as damages for non-acceptance of the cotton. The defendants contended that there had been no reasonable time allowed by the plaintiffs for the examination of the cotton and that a joint survey should have been held. Held, that a joint survey was not necessary under the terms of section 38 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that the defendant having had a period of twenty-four hours for inspection, had had a reasonable opportunity of seeing whether the cotton offered by the plaintiffs was such cotton as the plaintiffs were bound by their contract to deliver. 106. ———— Breach of warranty.—Goods not agreeing with sample.—Conduct of parties.—Estoppel.—In a suit for damages for breach of warranty where the dispute was whether the goods tendered (shellac) were according to the contract, it appeared that a sample had been taken by the plaintiff's sircar, and referred to the selling broker to decide whether the goods from which it had been taken ought to be accepted, and he decided that they should be taken at one rupee per maund less than the contract rate, which award the parties agreed to abide by. The sircar then went to the godown of the defendants, thoroughly examined the undelivered shellac, and removed it to the godown of the plaintiffs. Held, that after this the parties could not be allowed to raise the question whether there had been a breach of that contract and to ask for damages by reason of the goods not being of the quality contracted for. 107. ———— Alleged breach of warranty by vendor on a sale and delivery of goods.—Burden of proof after acceptance, following upon an examination by purchaser.—Under five contracts for the sale of good Burma cutch, to be delivered to a Calcutta firm, in Calcutta, by the vendors, who knew that it was bought for the export market, delivery and acceptance followed upon a searching examination of the cutch by the purchasers. The latter having sent advices of this purchase to a New York firm, with which they were in partnership, parcels of cutch were sold to different buyers in America, to whom, under such "forward" contracts, the cutch was shipped in separate shipments by the Calcutta firm. On the arrival of the cutch, objection was taken to its quality by the American buyers, who refused to take delivery. The Calcutta firm, thereupon, sued the vendors under the five contracts abovementioned. The burden of proof being upon the plaintiffs, who had accepted the cutch after full examination in Calcutta, to prove the breach of contract by the vendors by cogent evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of due performance that arose from such acceptance,—Held, that this presumption was not rebutted in the absence of evidence as to the treatment of the cutch on its re-shipment by the plaintiffs, on the voyage from India to America, and at the port of arrival. & Co., of Madras, contracted to deliver to P. & Co., of Madras, certain goods of a certain quality, subject to survey before shipment, at a certain price "f. o. b. Cocanada, delivery in April and May; terms, full advance and local exchange ¾ per cent. payable at Madras." This contract was contained in bought and sold notes. It was further agreed that the goods were to be delivered on board any ship P. & Co. might direct at the port of Cocanada. P. & Co. paid the full amount of the purchase money in January. On the 31st March P. & Co. wrote to W. & Co. requesting that the goods might be marked in a certain way. On the 18th May W. & Co. wrote to P. & Co., enclosing a letter from W. & Co., to S. N. & Co. of Cocanada, requesting S. N. & Co. to hold the goods (which were said to have been purchased by W. & Co. from S. N. & Co. and to be in godown) at the disposal of P. & Co. In the letter to P. & Co. from W. & Co. the goods were also said to be in godown at that date. On the same day P. & Co. wrote to S. N. & Co. enclosing a delivery order for the goods (which P. & Co. stated they believed to be in godown), requesting that they might be marked in a particular way. On the 25th May S. N. & Co. wrote to P. & Co. informing them that they held the goods at P. & Co.'s disposal. On the 28th May P. & Co. received this letter. On the 31st May P. & Co. chartered a ship to take on board the said goods and other goods bought by P. & Co., from S. N. & Co. and others, and wrote to S. N. & Co., informing them that the ship would arrive about the 12th June. On the 5th June P. & Co. wrote to S. N. & Co. acknowledging receipt of a letter which stated that only a portion of the goods to be shipped was ready. On the 9th June P. & Co. received a letter from S. N. & Co. stating that all the goods were ready. On the 17th June the ship arrived at Cocanada. On the 21st June S. N. & Co. stopped payment and ceased to carry on business. No goods were delivered according to the contract. S. N. & Co. never had the goods to deliver between 18th May and 17th June. In a suit by P. & Co. to recover from W. & Co. the price paid and damages for breach of contract to deliver the goods, it was contended for W. & Co.: I.—That the transfer of the delivery order of the 18th May amounted to a delivery of the goods. Held that, as S. N. & Co. had neither had possession of the goods to be delivered nor had appropriated any goods to the contract, the delivery order was inoperative. II.—That the acceptance of the delivery order by P. & Co. amounted to an agreement that S. N. & Co. should deliver to P. & Co. the goods when ready, and that the liability of S. N. & Co. was substituted for that of W. & Co. Held, that such an agreement could not be inferred. III.—That as S. N. & Co. by accepting the delivery order were estopped from denying that they had possession of the goods as against P. & Co., S. N. & Co. were discharged as against W. & Co., and therefore P. & Co. had no remedy against W. & Co. Held, (1) that S. N. & Co. were not discharged as against W. & Co., as S. N. & Co.'s representations were false; (2) that even if S. N. & Co. were discharged, this could not affect P. & Co.

V.—That W. & Co. had rescinded the contract on the 29th June by refusing to deliver, and therefore P. & Co. were only entitled to recover the price paid. Held, that W. & Co. were not entitled to rescind the contract. Held, also, that P. & Co. having paid in advance, were entitled to a reasonable time after the 29th June to prepare to purchase other goods, and were entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price on the 1st of July as damages for the breach to deliver. Towards the end of March, C. entered into an agreement with E., a merchant in Calcutta, under which E. accepted bills to a large amount for C., upon C.'s promise to cover the bills before maturity. In June C. ordered the defendant Railway Company to consign all goods despatched from Fyzabad to E.'s address, and empowered E. to take delivery of, and give receipts for, all such goods. In the same month, C. despatched from Patna, in bags supplied by S. & Co., fifty-five tons of poppy-seed to Calcutta, and sent the railway receipt to E., who was therein named as the consignee. One of the terms printed on the receipt stated that goods would only be delivered to the consignee named in the receipt, or to his order. In advising E. of the despatch of poppy-seed, C. informed him that it had been sold to S. & Co., and that delivery was to be made through T. & Co.; and E. had also seen letters which passed between C. and his agents, in which the following passages occurred: "Our Calcutta firm will deliver the poppy to T. & Co.," and "Do your best, and hurry off despatches of fifty tons of poppy; the rest of the poppy and linseed can go to E." E. endorsed the railway's receipt to S. & Co., who paid the freight, and sircars of E. and S. & Co. together went to the railway station and demanded delivery, which the Railway Company at first promised to give, but afterwards, under an order from C. to "deliver fifty tons to T. & Co., and to no other party, the rest of the seed to be delivered according to documents," they, at T. & Co.'s request, delivered the whole fifty-five tons to them. 1. ——— ss. 20, 21.—Mistake of facts.—Erroneous expectation.—The defendant executed to the plaintiff in 1847 a mulgeni kabuliat (corresponding to a lease at a fixed rental) agreeing to pay to the plaintiff R150 annually. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him the enhanced assessment and the cess. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, inasmuch as the defendant's liability was fixed by the terms of the mulgeni, which was binding, although it had been executed by both parties in the belief that the Government assessment would not be increased. the time of its execution by them, there was no dispute or question between them and plaintiff as to a partition of family property, which had been definitely settled by the Civil Court at Salem in Original Suit No. 2 of 1868, under the decree in which the defendants had recovered R13,000 and odd from the plaintiff. They denied any division of family property by mediation, as also that they agreed to pay R25,000 on account of family property in their possession, also the validity of A, and that it was legally binding upon them. The Court of first instance found (1) that a partition of family property was effected by mediation and the document A was executed to the mediators by defendants on account of family property in defendant's possession; (2) that A was valid in law and binding on defendants; and gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount sued for. Upon appeal by the first defendant,—Held, by the High Court, that as the decree in Original Suit No. 2 of 1868 (finally disposed of in appeal by the High Court) settled all the rights of the parties, and, among other matters, the question of this alleged concealment, or theft, which the Court found the present plaintiff to have falsely asserted, there was here, therefore, no res dubia or lis incerta, nor could either party believe that there was such. The final judgment of a competent Court in a suit to which the plaintiff was a party, had determined the matter. That, on the facts of the case, it seemed impossible to doubt that the note was executed as a consideration for getting rid of the criminal proceedings, and that, as such a consideration is not only null but vicious, the decree of the Civil Judge should be reversed. This bond the plaintiff charged the said defendant before the French legal authorities with having fraudulently abstracted from his house in Pondicherry, and he obtained the arrest and extradition from the British territory of the second defendant, as also of his brother, the first defendant. The latter on his way to Pondicherry met the plaintiff, and a settlement of accounts took place. The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth defendants made themselves liable by executing the bond sued on for the sum found due to the plaintiff, and took indemnity bonds to themselves from the first defendant, the consideration being the agreement of the plaintiff to discontinue further proceedings in the criminal charge. The Court at Pondicherry sanctioned the agreement as a compromise by civil redress, and suspended further proceedings in accordance with the law in force in the settlement. Held that the contract was enforceable, the facts of the case not showing the compromise to be in its nature prejudicial as being in contravention of public policy under the Government of British India, or injurious to the good order and interests of society in regard to the administration of public justice. The English Common Law rule, that contracts for the compounding or suppression of criminal charges for offences of a public nature are illegal and void, has no application to a contract for compounding the prosecution of criminal proceedings for an offence against the municipal law of a foreign country. The rule of international law, that the law of the place of a contract governs its validity, is subject to the qualification that every State may refuse to enforce a contract when it is for the fraudulent evasion of its law, or is injurious to its public institutions or interests. 4. ——— Consideration.—Void agreement.—Immoral consideration.—Past cohabitation.—Past cohabitation would not be an immoral consideration, if consideration it can properly be called, for a promise to pay a woman an allowance. Such a promise, however, is to be regarded as an undertaking by the promisor to compensate the promisee for past services voluntarily rendered to him, for which no consideration, as defined in the Contract Act, would be necessary. 5. ——— Consideration.—Post-nuptial contracts.—Contract partly legal and partly illegal.—The defendant, a Mahomedan husband, executed a kabinnama in favour of his wife, by which he agreed, among other things, that he would maintain her and make over to her whatever money he should earn; that he would never exercise any violence upon her; that he would not take her away from home; that it should not be within his power to marry or make any nika without her permission; that he would do nothing without her permission, and, if he did, she should be at liberty to divorce him, and realise from him the amount of dinmohur forthwith, and the nika would then be null and void. The plaintiff sued her husband upon this document, which was registered, to recover from him all his earnings amounting to R565, after deducting R54, which she admitted having received from him. The lower Appellate Court held, reversing the decision of the Munsif, that the agreement had been made subsequently to the marriage, and was, though registered, void for want of consideration. Held, on appeal, that the agreement being registered, came within section 25 of the Contract Act, and was not void on the ground that there was no consideration. Although some parts of the agreement might be illegal as being contrary to public policy, and therefore void, yet those which were legal could be enforced. (See

6. ——— Consideration.—Agreement to postpone execution proceedings.—Suit on agreement when execution is barred.—In execution of a decree, dated the 28th May 1843, under which certain persons were jointly liable, the 10th February 1881 was fixed for the sale of the debtors' property which was then under attachment, but on that day all the debtors except one, K., arranged with the decree-holders that the money should be paid by them in Bysack following, i.e., by the 12th May 1881; that in the meantime the execution proceedings should be struck off, the attachment still subsisting; and that if default should be made, execution should proceed and no objection, on the ground that the decree was more than twelve years old, should be made by the debtors. The terms of the arrangement were embodied in a petition and sanctioned by the Court, which thereupon struck off the case. The debtors having made default on the 13th September 1881, the decree-holders applied for execution, but K., who had not agreed to the arrangement, objected that the application was barred under section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the objection was held to be valid. The decree-holders then sued to recover the money for which execution had been taken out, basing their suit upon the arrangement made by the defendants on the 10th February 1881. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on proof that there was a contract between the parties on good consideration, and that the petition of 10th February 1881, though not a contract giving the plaintiffs a right of suit, might be regarded as evidence corroborating other evidence of such a contract. 7. ——— Consideration.—Voluntary alienation or conveyance. — Gift. — A decree-holder instituted a suit against his judgment-debtor and the latter's son for a declaration that a gift by the judgment-debtor to his son of certain property was fraudulent, and that such property was liable to be taken in execution of the decree. Held that, such gift having been made by the donor out of natural love and affection for the donee and in order to secure a provision for him and his descendants, and therefore for good consideration, and having operated, and the donor having reserved to himself sufficient property to satisfy the decree, the mere fact that the donor reserved to himself no property within the jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree was not a ground for holding that such gift was fraudulent and not made in good faith, and for setting it aside and allowing the decree-holder to proceed against the property transferred by it. 8. ——— Consideration.—Agreement without consideration.—The plaintiff sued to establish an agreement in writing by which the defendants promised to pay him a commission on articles sold through their agency in a bazar in which they occupied shops, in consideration of the plaintiff having expended money in the construction of such bazar. Such money had not been expended by the plaintiff at the request of the defendants, nor had it been expended by him for them voluntarily; but it had been expended by him voluntarily for third parties. Held, that such expenditure was not any consideration for the agreement within the meaning of section 2 (d) of Act IX of 1872, and the agreement did not fall within clause (2), section 25 of that Act, and was void for want of consideration. 11. ——— Promise to pay a debt barred by limitation.—Judgment-debt.—The holder of a decree for money, dated the 22nd June 1868, applied for execution on the 23rd February 1869. In September 1869, before the decree had been executed, the judgment-debtor, admitting that a certain amount was due under the decree, agreed to pay such amount by instalments; and that, if default were made, the decree should be executed for the whole amount thereof. Default having been made early in 1873, the decree-holder applied at once for execution of the decree. On the 5th May 1873, a petition, signed by the judgment-debtor, was preferred on his behalf to the Court executing the decree, such petition being in effect as follows: "Execution case for R6,839-15-3. In this case the decree-holder has filed an application for execution of his decree in consequence of a default in payment of instalments: the fact is that the petitioner has failed to pay the instalments simply owing to illness, otherwise he has no objection to the decree-holder's demand: in future he will not fail to pay instalments: he has written a letter to plaintiff asking him to pardon his breach of promise, and to agree to realise the decree-money by the instalments formerly fixed, and to stay execution of the decree for the present. The decree-holder has granted this request: the petitioner therefore presents this petition and prays that monthly instalments of ₹150 may be fixed, and execution of the decree be postponed for the present: in case of default being made in payment of two instalments in succession, the decree-holder will be at liberty to realise the balance of the decree-money with interest at twelve per cent. per annum." At the time such petition was preferred, execution of the decree was barred by limitation. Held, that a "debt" within the meaning of section 25 (3) of Act IX of 1872 includes a "judgment-debt," and such petition was a promise to pay a debt barred by limitation within the meaning of that law, and a suit founded on such petition to recover the balance of the money due under the decree was maintainable. On her death shortly afterwards, execution was taken out against her representatives. The representatives objected that the decree was barred, and that the kistbundi could not be substituted for the decree. The objection was, on appeal to the High Court, allowed. A. then brought a suit on the kistbundi. Held, that at the time the kistbundi was entered into, the decree was, under the limitation law then in force, capable of being executed, and that there was, therefore, valid consideration for the kistbundi. Held, also, that even had there been no valid consideration for the kistbundi, yet the principle laid down in section 25, clause 3 of Act IX of 1872, and which prevailed before the passing of that Act, would have saved the kistbundi from becoming void for want of consideration. between Hindus.—Acts IX of 1850 and XXVI of 1864.—21 Geo. III, c. 70, ss. 17 and 18.—Letters Patent, 1862, cl. 18.—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 19.—The effect of Act XXVI of 1864 was, that suits in the Small Cause Court were to be decided according to the law or equity administered in the High Court; by the Charter of 1862 that law or equity was to be "the law or equity which would have been applied by the Supreme Court," and by the Charter of 1865 that "which would have been applied by the High Court" under the Charter of 1862. The Statute 21 George III, Cap. 70, which applied to the Supreme Court, and gave to Hindus the right to have matters of contract decided by their own laws, became, if its provisions apply to the High Court, part of the law of that Court not by virtue of the Statute itself, but by virtue of the Charter which was subject to alteration by the Governor General in Council; and having ceased to have any operation as an Act, it was unnecessary to repeal it expressly by the Contract Act (IX of 1872). That Act is applicable to Hindus residing in Calcutta; therefore, where the plaintiff, a Hindu, agreed with the defendants, also Hindus, that he would cease to carry on his business in a certain locality in Calcutta, in consideration of receiving from them a specified sum, it was held, in a suit to enforce the contract, that such an agreement was void under section 27 of the Contract Act. The words "not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act," in section 1 of the Contract Act, apply to "any usage or custom of trade" or "any incident of any contract." In pursuance of the agreement D. and E. went to Madras, and entered into the service of the firm. After it had continued for about 2½ years the service was determined by notice from the firm. D. and E. then, in violation of their said covenants, refused to return to England, though requested to do so by the firm, and proceeded to set up and carry on, on their own account, business of the same kind as that carried on by the firm. Held, in a suit by the firm against D. and E. for damages for breaches of the said covenants, and for a perpetual injunction restraining D. and E. from carrying on in Madras, or within 800 miles from Madras, any business carried on by the firm, that, treating the covenant in restraint of trade as one entered into in England, it could not, even if valid by the law of England, be enforced in India, inasmuch as its object was to contravene the law of India (section 27 of Act IX of 1872). Held, further, that that covenant would have been void by the law of England because the limit of the restriction was unreasonable, and, as no narrower limit had been mentioned in the agreement, this was not a case where the covenant could have been enforced within a narrower and reasonable limit. Held, also, that the covenant to return to England, except so far as it operated improperly in restraint of trade, was a covenant the breach of which did not in any way cause damage to the firm, and therefore such breach did not entitle them to any damages. cific performance of agreement to refer.—Suit for damages for breach of agreement to refer.—A contract entered into by the plaintiffs with the defendants contained a clause providing, in case of any dispute, for a reference to two arbitrators in England, one to be appointed by each of the contracting parties, whose decision in the matter was to be final. The contract contained no provision for making the submission to arbitration a rule of Court, so that 9 and 10 William III, c. 15, and 3 and 4 William IV, c. 42, section 39, did not apply. Matter of dispute arising, the defendants refused to appoint an arbitrator, and an award was made by arbitrators appointed by the plaintiffs. Previous to the making of the award the plaintiffs, under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, had the submission to arbitration made a rule of the Court of Common Pleas, In a suit in which the plaintiffs' claim was for damages awarded by the arbitrators and incurred by the plaintiffs in respect of the breach of the contract,—Held, the award was invalid. The making the submission a rule of Court has not the effect of depriving a party of his right to revoke, at any time before the award, the authority of arbitrators whom he has appointed: still less could it have any effect to prevent him from declining to appoint an arbitrator. Held, also, the contract was not within the scope of section 28, Act IX of 1872. To make an agreement conform to exception 1 of that section, the jurisdiction of the Courts must be excluded in all respects except the matter which is the result of the arbitrators' award. Agreements which exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts until an award is made, as in Scott v. Avery, 2 Jur., N. S., 815: 5 H. L. C., 811, are within that exception, and are not illegal. Quære,—Whether it was intended by that exception to authorise the Court to entertain a suit for specific performance of an agreement to refer to arbitration. Held, on appeal, that the contract was not one of the nature referred to in section 28, Act IX of 1872. The first exception in that section applies only to a class of contracts where the parties have agreed that no action shall be brought, until some question of amount has first been decided by the arbitrators. Semble,—A suit will not lie to enforce an agreement to refer to arbitration, even in the case referred to in the first exception to section 28 of Act IX of 1872. The plaintiffs then made a claim against the defendants for excess refraction, and the defendants thereupon refused to deliver the remainder of the linseed unless the plaintiffs paid the full amount owing for the portion which had been delivered. The plaintiffs declined to accept these terms and the defendants then cancelled the contract. Held by GARTH, *C. Of the latter property, the plaintiffs, who also represented the first mortgagee, had become purchasers, and they filed objections to the sale. 1. ——— Illegal collection of cess.—Bom. Act III of 1869, s. 8.—Suit to recover cess fraudulently levied.—The plaintiffs sued to recover back from the defendant the amount levied by him as local cess on certain wanta lands belonging to the plaintiffs, the defendant claiming to be the superior holder of the village in which the lands were situated. The amount was levied by the defendant through the assistance of the mamlatdar under Bombay Act III of 1869, section 8. The defendant contended that, in consequence of a demand from Government, he had paid local cess on the whole of his talooka, including the village in which the plaintiffs' lands were situated and was therefore, entitled, under sections 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), to recover from them the amount which he had paid to Government as a portion of the cess which rateably fell upon their lands. It was found that the defendant was not the proprietor of the lands held by the plaintiffs, and that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between them; also that defendant paid local cess for the plaintiffs' lands fraudulently and with the intention of thereby making evidence of title to their lands, knowing that he had no lawful or just claim to them. Held, that the defendant was not a person "interested in the payment" of the money made by him to Government, within the meaning of section 69 of the Contract Act, assuming that a portion of that sum was demanded by Government in respect of the plaintiffs' wanta lands, and that they were "bound by law to pay" it to Government. Held, further, that the defendant did not "lawfully" make the payment, within the meaning of section 70 of the Act, inasmuch as he did so fraudulently and dishonestly. 2. ——— The Summary Settlement (Bom.) Act, VII of 1863, ss. 2, 6, 9.—Inamdar.—Suit for contribution.—The plaintiff was the jaghirdar of a village in which the defendant held certain land as inamdar on the annual payment of a certain quit-rent. The plaintiff's jaghir was, in point of time, subsequent to the defendant's inam. Ever since the time of the jaghir, the ancestors of the defendant (and, after them, the defendant himself) paid the quit-rent to the ancestors of the plaintiff, and, after them, to the plaintiff himself. In 1869 the summary settlement was introduced into the village under Bombay Act VII of 1863. Under section 9 of that Act a notice was served upon the plaintiff by the Collector in respect of the village, and he accepted the settlement provided in sections 2 and 6 of the Act. Government, accordingly, granted the village to him at the summary settlement of two annas in the rupee of the full assessment. No notice was served upon the defendant under the Act, nor did the plaintiff inform the defendant of the notice which the plaintiff had received in respect of the village. The certificate issued by the Collector to the plaintiff, previously to the grant of the sanad regarding the settlement, contained the following passage: "Before the villages (Vesu and Sanya) were granted in jaghir, lands were held by peta-inamdars over which the jaghirdar has no right. They are entered in the sanad only for the purpose of receiving the settlement and paying it over to the Sarkar." In 1877 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the amount of three years' summary settlement which he (plaintiff) had paid to Government on account of the defendant's land. Held, that sections 69 and 70 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) did not apply to the case. In such suit it was contended that the payments were merely voluntary, and that the plaintiff could not recover them. Held, that the plaintiff was "interested" in making the payments, and was therefore entitled to recover under section 69 of the Contract Act. Held, further, that section 70 of the Contract Act applied to the case, inasmuch as the word "does" in that section includes payments of money, and also that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under section 9 of the revenue sale law, as he believed in good faith that his interest would be endangered by a sale taking place. The liability of a landlord under section 9 of the revenue sale law to recoup a person paying Government revenue for him does not depend upon the question of whether the money was originally deposited or not, but accrues upon its being credited in payment of the arrears. The golah was accidentally burnt, and the residue of the rice destroyed. In a suit by A. to recover from B. the balance of the purchase-money (after deducting the payments made) under the contract,—Held, that the sale was complete, and the ownership, with the risk of loss in the rice sold, passed to B. under sections 78 and 86 of the Contract Act, because the contract was for "ascertained goods" for which B. had paid earnest-money and taken part delivery; and that it was not open to B. to rescind the sale on alleging and proving a breach of warranty on the part of A. unless he could bring the case within the provisions of section 19; but that he was precluded from so doing, because he might have discovered the inferiority of the quality of the rice by using "ordinary diligence." These terms were embodied in a voucher which was signed by D. The monthly hire was not regularly paid, and the plaintiff sued for and obtained a decree for a portion of the hire up to May 1873. Subsequently, in that month, D. sold the piano to the defendant, who obtained delivery of it in June. In a suit by the plaintiff in trover for conversion of the piano, the Judge found that the defendant acted in good faith. Held, that the possession acquired by D. was not possession by consent of the owner within the meaning of section 108 of Act IX of 1872, exception 1, and that he did not, by sale to the defendant, transfer the ownership in the piano to him. 1. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court.—Suit for dissolution of partnership and for account.—The suit was brought for a dissolution of partnership between plaintiff and first defendant, and for an account as between them. It was alleged in the plaint that plaintiff and first defendant entered into partnership in 1864 to work a jungle in the North Arcot District which had been leased to plaintiff for three years; that fourth defendant was subsequently admitted a partner, and that the contract was carried on under the style of R. T. & Co.; that in March 1867, fourth defendant took up a contract in Madras and another general partnership was established, of which plaintiff and first defendant were members; that the funds of the first firm, became incorporated in the second firm, which was styled K. T. & K., and that this firm undertook several contracts in Madras and Chingleput; and finally, that the cause of action was the refusal of first defendant to account, and accrued in North Arcot District, where all the defendants resided permanently. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that, under section 265 of the Contract Act, he had no jurisdiction. Held, on appeal, that the District Court of North Arcot had jurisdiction, as the defendants were resident within the district; that the provision in the Contract Act is permissive and does not

3. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court.—Partnership, winding up.—The Bombay Civil Courts Act, No. XIV of 1869.—Power of District Judge to refer to Assistant Judge a case falling under s. 265 of Contract Act.—A previous dissolution of partnership is necessary in order to give jurisdiction to the District Court under section 265 of the Contract Act. Accordingly, where a suit was instituted in the District Court of Ahmedabad by some members of a partnership (which, however, was not dissolved at the date of the suit) for the winding up of the business of a ginning factory and for distributing among the shareholders any surplus that might remain, after providing for the payment of its debts, under section 265 of Act IX of 1872, and the Assistant Judge, to whom it was referred for trial by the District Judge, directed the dissolution of the partnership and the winding up of its business, the High Court on appeal reversed the decree of the Assistant Judge, and returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for its presentation to the proper Court. Quære,—Whether the District Judge had power, under the Bombay Civil Courts Act, XIV of 1869, to refer to the Assistant Judge a case falling under section 265 of Act IX of 1872. 4. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court.— Winding up partnership.— Subordinate Court.—Bengal Civil Courts Act (VI of 1871), s. 11.—The Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the meaning of section 11 of the Civil Courts Act. The word "may" in section 265 of the Contract Act has a somewhat similar force to the words "it shall be lawful" in a statute, which merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. And the words "may apply" in the section create a new jurisdiction, which must be exercised strictly in accordance with the statute which creates it,—that is to say, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm, which it is sought to wind up, is situated. It was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting section 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives, cannot obtain the relief mentioned in the section except by resorting to that Court. The presumption that the existing jurisdiction of a Court is not intended to be taken away unless express words have been used for that purpose usually applies only to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts. Unless the jurisdiction of a superior Court is expressly and clearly taken away, such jurisdiction will be presumed to continue. PROSAD DOSS MULLICK v. RUSSICK LALL MULLICK. The High Court subsequently transferred it to its own file. Held, that the suit was not one falling within the purview of section 265 of the Contract Act; but, assuming that it was such a suit, and the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, the High Court was nevertheless competent to transfer it. The matters in difference in the suit were eventually referred to arbitration under Chapter XXXVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an award was given declaring the plaintiff entitled to recover a certain sum from the defendant. Judgment and a decree were given in accordance with the award. Held, that the suit was not an application of the nature mentioned in section 265 of the Contract Act, 1872, but a suit of the nature mentioned in section 215 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was therefore not cognizable in the District Court, but in the Court of the Munsif. Prosad Doss Mullick v. *Russick Lall Mullick, I. 10. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court.—Partnership suit.—Subordinate Court.—Dissolution.—Wrong.—Damages.—Code of Civil Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, s. 213.—A suit for winding up an expired partnership can be brought in the District Court under section 265 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) and section 213 of the Civil Procedure Code Act (XIV of 1882). But the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts is not annulled by the special jurisdiction assigned to the District Court by section 265 of the Contract Act. Any one having a cause of action arising out of partnership transactions may sue the person liable in the ordinary Court. The jurisdiction of such Court, however, does not extend to the case of a winding up of an expired partnership. This jurisdiction is given to the District Court by section 265 of the Contract Act, and when, along with a new mode of relief, particular jurisdiction is constituted to administer it, the Court specified, and no other, is to be understood as vested with authority. Hence, though administration for the purpose may apparently be sought in the subordinate Courts, it can be obtained, in the case of an expired partnership, only in the District Court or the High Court. But the jurisdiction of the subordinate Courts in other respects is not extinguished. An apparent cause of action gives a right to sue in them for such relief as they can afford, though not for the particular kind of relief contemplated in section 265 of the Contract Act. Where in a suit a cause of action appears which in itself is cognizable by an inferior Court, such a Court is not justified in rejecting the suit, merely because it is one in which the District Court might have jurisdiction under section 265 of the Contract Act. Where an application under section 265 of the Contract Act is presented to the District Court, that Court should determine whether it is (1) a mere case of administration, or (2) of administration sought as a cloak for strictly litigious claims, or (3) of administration plus claims involving litigation of the ordinary means. In the second case it may properly decline a function that properly belongs to an ordinary Court. In the last case it may either assume the administration of the estate of the firm, or decline to do so, according to circumstances, subject to appeal, and in the former case it may either itself deal with all questions arising between the ex partners, or if these be of such a kind as to form separable subjects of adjudication, it can direct the party in each case interested to proceed on the particular alleged cause of action in the Court having ordinary jurisdiction, and itself use the result as an element of its administration. 11. ——— Jurisdiction of District Court.—Jurisdiction of Subordinate Court.—Practice.—Section 265 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) assumes that there has been a partnership, and enables the District Court to wind it up, but does not deprive the ordinary Courts of their jurisdiction in cases seriously contested as to the existence of partnership. One of these parties accordingly sued others of them, on the allegation that his share of the property sold exceeded the lands occupied by him in the jote jumma, and asked the Court to give him a joint and several decree against all the defendants for the entire amount of the difference. Held, that plaintiff could not be entitled to such a decree, but should have asked that the defendants might be directed to contribute to him in proportion to their respective shares, if his complaint was well founded. But as defendants alleged that, although plaintiff held that small quantity, it was compensated for in other ways, it was for plaintiff to show that he did not derive from, or by virtue of his share in, the jote jumma a profit or interest equivalent to the interest he held in it. An action by one guarantor against his co-guarantors will lie where a single guarantor has paid the debt, and it is not necessary, in order to maintain such an action, to show that the liquidating guarantor had previously applied to, or proceeded against, the principal, with a view to recover the debt from him. He now sued to recover the amount so paid. Held, that D.'s claim was unjust, for when he was paid up by J., he was bound to give up his lien on P.'s share which became vested in J. Accordingly, in buying that share he took it burdened with his own lien, and when J. paid off the entire liability, he succeeded to the right of contribution from P. by buying it from her share. The defendants were the descendants of the original owners of the village, who, about 1768, finding themselves unable to meet the expenses attaching to the village, gave up their title to it to the ancestors of the plaintiffs on condition of retaining a third of the lands rent-free as their wanta, or share, subject to no other condition but a house-tax. Held, that a settlement made by the plaintiffs without the defendants' consent was not binding on the latter, and any payment made by them to Government was a purely voluntary one, to which they could not ask the defendants to contribute. Also, assuming that the relationship of landlord and tenant did exist between the parties, a suit by the plaintiffs against the defendants would not lie for contribution to any expenses to which the plaintiffs as landlords might have been put in defending or perfecting their title. 24. ——— Payment by jaghirdar.—Summary Settlement Act, Bombay, VII of 1863.—Liability of inamdar.—The plaintiff was the jaghirdar of a village in which the defendant held certain land as inamdar on the annual payment of a certain quit-rent. The plaintiff's jaghir was, in point of time, subsequent to the defendant's inam. Ever since the time of the jaghir, the ancestors of the defendant (and, after them, the defendant himself) paid the quit-rent to the ancestors of the plaintiff, and, after them, to the plaintiff himself. In 1869 the summary settlement was introduced into the village under Bombay Act VII of 1863. Under section 9 of that Act, a notice was served upon the plaintiff by the Collector in respect of the village, and he accepted the settlement provided in sections 2 and 6 of the Act. Government, accordingly, granted the village to him at the summary settlement of two annas in the rupee of the full assessment. No notice was served upon the defendant under the Act, nor did the plaintiff inform the defendant of the notice which the plaintiff had received in respect of the village. The certificate issued by the Collector to the plaintiff, previously to the grant of the sanad regarding the settlement, contained the following passage: "Before the villages (Vesu and Sanya) were granted in jaghir, lands were held by peta-inamdars over which the jaghirdar has no right. They are entered in the sanad only for the purpose of receiving the settlement and paying it over to the Sarkar." In 1877 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the amount of three years' summary settlement which he (plaintiff) had paid to Government on account of the defendant's land. Held, that the defendant was not liable to pay, whether regarded as an independent inamdar holding directly under Government or as a tenant of the plaintiff. Subsequently portions of such estate were purchased by the plaintiff and the defendants at an execution-sale. Subsequently again, the mortgagee sued the mortgagor and the plaintiff for the mortgage-money, claiming to recover it by the sale of the portion of such estate purchased by the plaintiff. Having obtained a decree, the mortgagee caused a portion of such portion to be sold in the execution of the decree. In order to save the remainder of such portion from sale in the execution of the decree, the plaintiff satisfied the judgment-debt. He then sued P., D.'s co-mortgagor, to recover half the amount he had so paid, by the sale of P.'s two biswas. Held that, inasmuch as, when A. discharged the whole amount of the mortgage-debt, he not only became entitled to a contribution of half such amount from P., but having acquired the rights of the mortgagee was competent to assert a lien on P.'s two biswas share, A. was entitled to a decree as claimed. 1. ——— Hindu convert to Christianity.—Law governing converts.—Hindu law.—Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity, the Hindu law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert. He may renounce the old law by which he was bound, as he has renounced the old religion, or, if he thinks fit, he may abide by the old law, notwithstanding he has renounced the old religion. The profession of Christianity releases the convert from the trammels of Hindu law, but it does not of necessity involve any change of the rights or relations of the convert in matters with which Christianity has no concern, such as his rights and interests in, and his powers over, property. The convert, though not bound as to such matters, either by the Hindu law or by any positive law, may, by his course of conduct after his conversion, have shown by what law he intended to be governed as to these matters. by the Indian Succession Act, 1865. A. K., a Brahman, went through a Hindu marriage ceremony with S., a Brahman girl of eight years of age, in 1850. The marriage was never consummated, nor was the consummation ceremony performed. In 1851, A. K. was converted to Christianity. S. refused to live with him because he was an outcast, and in 1857 S. renounced all claims on him or his estate. In 1858, A. K. went through a Christian form of marriage with M. In 1881, A. K. died intestate, and possession was taken of his estate by the Administrator General. S. claimed the estate from the Administrator General. Her suit was dismissed on the ground that A. K. having died an outcast and degraded, and his degradation not atoned for under Hindu law, no right of inheritance remained to her. Before judgment was delivered S. died and the suit abated. In a suit filed by the Administrator General to have the estate administered by the Court, the claimants were (1) the father of A. K., (2) the brother of A. K., undivided from his father, and (3) the executor of M. Held, that S. was the wife of A. K. when he went through the form of marriage with M., and that, but for the fact that S. had relinquished her rights, S. would have been entitled on the death of A. K. to such portion of his estate as the law assigned to her as his widow. Held, also, that under section 35 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the father of A. K. was entitled to the whole of the estate. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF MADRAS v. ANANDACHARI . I. L. R. 9 Mad., 466

6. ——— Converts from Hindu to Mahomedan religion.—Custom as to inheritance.—The general presumption arising from the intimate connection between law and religion in the Mahomedan faith, is that the Mahomedan law governs converts from the Hindu religion to Mahomedanism. But a well-established custom in the case of such converts to follow their old Hindu law of inheritance would override that general presumption, and a usage establishing a special rule of inheritance as regards a special kind of property would be given the force of law, even though it be at variance with both Hindu and Mahomedan laws. 27. ——— Irregularity in Criminal proceedings.—Prejudging defence.—Upon the single charge of wrongful confinement preferred under section 342 of the Penal Code, before a Joint Magistrate, the prisoners raised a defence justifying the confinement on the ground that the persons confined had been caught by them under circumstances which led to the belief that they had committed house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft. Enquiry having been made, the Magistrate committed the prisoner not only for wrongful confinement, but, disbelieving the defence, for fabricating false evidence and for bringing a false charge. The prisoners were tried by the Sessions Judge and found guilty on all three charges at one and the same time. Held, that the conviction on the last two charges was illegal, as by adding the additional charges the Magistrate had really prejudged the defence to the first charge. Where the Court, without having first heard the evidence for the prosecution, examines the witnesses for the defence, he commits an irregularity, but if the prisoners are not materially prejudiced thereby, the conviction will not be set aside. 1. GENERAL RIGHTS IN JOINT PROPERTY.

1. ——— Right of co-sharers.—Tenants of co-sharers.—The right of a sharer in a joint estate is a right of common enjoyment of the lands and premises, together with the tenants of the co-sharers, in like manner as the co-sharers themselves would have it. HULODHUR SEN v. GOOROO DAS ROY [20 W. R., 126

2. ——— Occupation by co-sharers of separate portions of estate.—The legal position of co-sharers in an estate occupying separate portions in it is that each possesses and holds, in respect of his several right, to enjoy that which is his own. If one holds a portion larger than his share the inequality may be rectified by a partition, or if a dispute arise on a division of the annual profits it may be adjusted in a suit for an account. KALEE PERSHAD v. LUTAFUT HOSSEIN . 12 W. R., 418

3. ——— Use of property by co-sharers or tenants-in-common.—A Court of Equity will not interfere where a tenant-in-common acts reasonably for the purpose of enjoying the property held in common in any way in which an owner can enjoy such property without injury to his coparcener, but the case is different where there has been a direct infringement of a clear and distinct right. GOPEE KISHEN GOSSAIN v. HEM CHUNDER GOSSAIN [13 W. R., 322

4. ——— Manager of khoti tenure.—Right of manager to abandon rights without consent of co-sharers.—In the absence of evidence of custom rendering the act of one sharer in a khotship (which act involved the sacrifice of important rights) binding upon his co-sharers, a managing khot has, without the assent of his co-sharers, no power to give up rights which belong to them as well as himself. COLLECTOR OF RATNAGIRI v. VYANKATRAV NARAYAN SURVE . 8 Bom., A. C., 1

5. ——— Sale by some co-sharers.—Authority to sell.—Debt due by all the co-sharers.—The mere circumstance of the existence of a debt due from all the co-sharers is by no means of itself enough to confer authority on some of several co-sharers to dispose of the other share. MAHOMED FAIZ ALI KHAN v. GUNGA RAM . 1 Agra, 112

6. ——— Collection of rent in various kinds for joint tenure.—Sharer in ijmali julkur.—The sharer of an ijmali julkur is not debarred from collecting his separate julkur jumma if he legally can do so, simply because it suits the purpose of another sharer to receive, in lieu of such a jumma, a consolidated chitti jumma. KASHEE NATH DHUR v. GUDADHUR PAUL . . . . 11 W. R., 374

7. ——— Consent to commutation of rent.—Want of consent of all sharers.—Where a tenant applied for commutation of rent paid in kind, one of three lumberdars was held entitled to insist upon the adjudication on the amount of the rate as directed by law; and the consent of two other lumberdars to accept a lower rate of rent cannot debar this right. ROOPA v. SAHIB SINGH [1 Agra, Rev., 58

8. ——— Separate payment of share of rent.—A co-sharer in an under-tenure cannot claim separate payment of his share of the rent without the written consent of the zemindar; and if the zemindar refuses to make a division of the property, application should be made to the Collector under section 27, Act X of 1859. ISSUR CHUNDER GHOSAL v. MOOKTORAM PANDA . . 9 W. R., 606

9. ——— Receipts of rent by co-sharers. — Accounts. — Limitation. — Where persons jointly interested in an estate arranged that the rents should be received by an agent, and they themselves sometimes collected direct from the tenants, such collection being treated as a receipt by the agent or by some one on his behalf, and not as a collection antagonistic to the rights of the other joint tenants, the law of limitation is no bar to taking the back accounts. Where one tenant-in-common receives rents, and then relinquishes his interest in the estate to another, that other is not answerable to the third tenant-in-common for any claim he may have against the first for having received more than his share. KHAJURUNNISSA v. AHMED REZA. AHMED REZA v. KHAJURUNNISSA [8 B. L. R., 93: 16 W. R., P. C., 1

10. ——— Co-sharer acting as manager.—Remuneration.—A volunteer, who acts as manager, cannot claim remuneration from his co-sharers without showing a previous consent on their part to pay him. GUNDO ANANDRAVETAL v. KRISTNARAV GOVIND . . . 4 Bom., A. C., 55

11. ——— Measurement of land, Right to.—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 38.—Fractional proprietor.—Parties.—A part proprietor of an estate is competent under section 38 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 to apply for measurement of its lands after making the remaining proprietors parties to the proceedings. ABDOOL HOSSEIN v. LALL CHAND MAHTON [I. L. R., 10 Calc., 36: 13 C. L. R., 323

12. ——— Liability for repairs of tank by zemindar.—Joint and several liability.—Proportionate liability.—A zemindar had expended certain sums at the defendants' request to repair a tank for the irrigation of lands held by them in common with him. In a suit brought to recover the sums so expended, it was contended that the receiver could only sue the defendants severally for their proportionate shares of the sum claimed. Held, that the defendants were jointly and severally liable for the sum sued for. RAM NATH SINGH v. GONDEE SINGH . . . 10 W. R., 441

14. ——— Purchaser of a share in a joint tenure.—Severance of tenure by sale of share.—Apportionment of rent.—Parties.—A sale of a share in a tenure, let out to a tenant in its entirety, does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent; but if a purchaser of the share desires to have such a severance, he is entitled to enforce it. If he takes no steps for that purpose, then the tenant is justified in paying the entire rent to all the parties jointly entitled to it. But if the purchaser desires to effect a severance of the tenure and an apportionment of the rent, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect, and then if the parties cannot agree to an apportionment, the purchaser may sue the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all the other co-sharers parties to the suit. It is impossible upon principle to distinguish cases where a tenure is sold privately from those where it is sold by public auction, or, on the other hand, to distinguish cases where a tenure is severed by different portions of its area being sold to different persons, from those where it is sold to different persons in undivided shares. In all such cases the entirety of the joint interest should be considered as severable at the option of the purchaser. ISHWAR CHUNDER DUTT v. RAM KRISHNA DASS

Whilst her share was under attachment, B. stopped paying the Government revenue, whereupon the plaintiff, a co-sharer in the estate, paid the whole revenue in order to save the mehal from sale. In a suit brought against A. and B. for recovery of the sum paid by the plaintiff on behalf of B.'s share,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the sum so paid declared to be a charge upon the share of B., which had been transferred to A., but not to a personal decree against A. ENAYET HOSSEIN v. MUDDUN MONEE SHAHOON

17. ——— Altering property without consent of co-sharers.—Growing indigo.—Several persons jointly held lands which were not divided by metes and bounds, but in specified shares. One of the shareholders leased out his share or interest in the lands. The lessee sowed indigo in the joint lands. The other shareholders brought a suit to restrain the lessee of their co-sharer from growing indigo on the land. Held, that a co-sharer cannot use ijmali lands so as to alter the condition of the property as regards the other shareholders without their consent; that indigo as a crop being valueless for purposes of distraint, the lessee must be restrained from growing it without the consent of all the proprietors. The mortgage was effected by the mortgagor as manager of all the co-sharers in union. In 1848 one of the co-sharers redeemed his share of two pies in the mortgaged property, and a further share of two pies therein was redeemed by a second co-sharer in 1867. The plaintiff was admittedly the owner of another two-pie share; but he now sued the defendant to redeem the whole of the property still unredeemed, viz., a one anna eight pies share of the original mortgage. The defendant objected that the plaintiff could only redeem his own two-pie share, which had become separated from the rest. The plaintiff denied that the estate had been divided. Held, that the plaintiff's claim being to redeem all that remained of the estate in the mortgagee's possession, the suit could not be maintained, unless all the other persons interested in the equity of redemption were before the Court either as co-plaintiffs or as defendants. Without their presence the suit could not be properly disposed of, and the excuse, that the defendant did not take objection at the right time, had, under such circumstances, no validity. As owner of a two-pie share, which by consent of all interested had become an estate wholly separated from the other parts of the original aggregate, the plaintiff would have been bound to set forth the transactions on which his right rested. 119. ——— Arrangement for separate payment of rent.—Evidence of arrangement.—Parties.—Suits for arrears of rent.—Suit for kabuliat.—Enhancement of rent.—Cancellation of lease.—Where it has been arranged between the co-sharers of an estate and their tenant that he shall pay each co-sharer his proportionate share of the entire rent, each co-sharer may bring a separate suit against the tenant for such proportionate share. In the absence of such an arrangement no such suit can be maintained. Such an arrangement may be evidenced either by direct proof or by usage from which its existence may be presumed, and is perfectly consistent with the continuance of the original lease of the entire tenure. But an arrangement of this nature will not enable one co-sharer to sue the tenant for a kabuliat, for a co-sharer who obtains a kabuliat is bound at the request of the tenant to give him a pottah upon the same terms, and the grant and acceptance of a binding lease of any separate share cannot exist contemporaneously with an original lease of the entire tenure. 4. ——— Appeal.—Appeal irregularly brought after time has been granted to apply to original Court.—Certain objections were taken in an execution-proceeding, and the Judge before whom the objections were heard passed an order disposing of the objections save as to two, which he decided he had no jurisdiction to entertain. The objector then made a special application to the Judge to obtain time to make an application with reference to these objections to the Court from which the decree had been transferred, and accordingly time was granted him to do so; but, instead of applying, the objector preferred an appeal to the High Court against the order of the Judge disposing of the objections. 5. ——— Laches in bringing appeal.—Application to High Court's superintendence when appeal lay.—A suit was appealed to the Judge who remanded it to the lower Court for re-trial; the lower Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiff then presented a petition to the High Court praying that the order of the Judge remanding the suit might be set aside under the provisions of section 35, Act XXIII of 1861, on the ground that, as the value of the property in suit was admittedly more than ₹5,000, the Judge had exceeded his powers in hearing the appeal. The High Court held that it had no power under section 35 of Act XXIII of 1861 to entertain the application, as it was open to the petitioner to present an appeal against the order of the Judge remanding the suit, and that he must proceed by way of appeal. The plaintiff having appealed, the order of the Judge was set aside; but it was held that by reason of his laches the plaintiff was disentitled to his costs. TUKEE ALI v. SAADUT ALI [5 N. A clear case of fraud and collusion must be made out to entitle the attorney to the interference of the Court. RAMANATH DUTT v. MATUNGINEE DOSSEE [12 R. L. R., 110

The last mortgage was foreclosed, and the mortgagee obtained a decree for possession. In a suit for the recovery of the property by a descendant of the vendee claiming as shebait of the idol, it was held that the zemindar and the putnidar, who were both compelled to appear for the protection of their interests, and whose defences were not necessarily identical, were entitled to separate costs. GOBIND NATH ROY v. LUCHMEE KOOMAREE . . . 11 W. R., 36

28. ——— Separate costs allowed to separate defendants.—Receipt for costs.—Where two separate sets of defendants were allowed separate costs, Held, it was not necessary to keep the whole amount in Court after levying it from the plaintiffs, until a joint receipt could be given by the whole of the defendants: the proper course was to give notice to the second set of defendants to come in and show what portion of the costs they were entitled to. NUFFER CHUNDER PAUL v. NUDUROONISSA BEEBEE [9 W. R., 387

29. ——— Costs of defendant with separate interests consenting to decree.—The rules relating to pleaders' fees passed by the Court on 13th June 1866 do not provide for the case of defendants who have separate interests, and who consent to a decree, the amount of costs to be allowed in such a case being in the discretion of the Court. A farmer of the lands under him claimed a portion of the same sum as compensation for the residue of his lease. Held that the farmer was entitled to such compensation, and that, in apportioning the costs of a suit brought to try the question, in which the ijaradar was plaintiff and the Government and the farmer defendants, the farmer was entitled to receive from the ijaradar the costs of his demand to the extent to which it was established, and the plaintiff to receive from the farmer the costs applicable to an excess in the demand of the farmer beyond that which he succeeded in establishing; and that Government was entitled to receive the costs which it had incurred from both parties, in the proportion in which each had failed in establishing his claim. The lease contained a covenant to repair. A. died, and B., his administrator, assigned the lease to another, and it ultimately became vested in the plaintiff. In 1872 the plaintiff assigned the lease to the defendants, "under and subject to the covenants" therein contained. The defendants failed to repair, and after the term had expired, C., the representative of the lessor, sued B. for arrears of rent and damages for non-repair. B. defended the suit, but C. obtained a decree against him for ₹6,167-3 and costs, amounting in all to ₹8,328-3. His own costs amounted to ₹1,491-1. In 1876 B. paid C. the ₹8,328-3. In 1877 B. sued the plaintiff for the amount which he had been compelled to pay C., and for the amount of his own costs. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendants to intervene and defend if they desired; but they did not reply, and the plaintiff consented to a decree for ₹6,932-12-11 with costs. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover from the defendants the sum recovered from him by B., together with his own costs of defence. Held that, in the case of contracts of indemnity, the liability of the party indemnified to a third person, is not only contemplated at the time of the indemnity, but is the very moving cause of that contract; and in cases of such a nature costs reasonably incurred in resisting, or

92. ——— Order decreeing costs in proportion.—An order decreeing to plaintiff his costs in proportion, must be taken to mean as if costs were given in proportion to the amount decreed and dismissed; so that, except when there is a distinct order restricting costs to the plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to his costs on the portion of the claim dismissed, although the order does not in words provide for it. 93. ——— Unsuccessful plaintiff as to whole claim.—Where a plaintiff is entitled to some part of his claim, he ought not to be deprived of the benefit of the decree by such an order as to costs as would make him liable to the defendant for more than he would himself recover. RAM CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. MARIOTT . 15 W. R., 465

94. ——— Plaintiff only partly successful.—Pressure by defendants to sue.—Although the plaintiff was unable to satisfy the Judge below as to each item of property for which she sued, and did not obtain a decree for the full amount claimed, yet she was held entitled to recover the whole of the costs incurred by her in a suit into which she had been forced by the defendants for the recovery of her property. 95. ——— Costs between party and party.—Calculation of costs.—Portion of claim allowed and part disallowed.—Where the decree in a suit directed the payment of costs by the plaintiff and defendants respectively, in proportion to the amounts decreed and disallowed, the Second Subordinate Judge, before whom the matter came, gave the plaintiff costs at the rate of 5 per cent. on the amount decreed, up to ₹5,000, and to the defendants at the rate of 2 per cent. on the amount disallowed, on the ground that such was in accordance with the practice not only of the Court of the Moonsif, but of the First Subordinate Judge of the District. Held that the method adopted was erroneous, and that the proper mode of giving effect to such a decree was to calculate the amount of the costs of the suit as laid, and then divide the entire sum proportionately between the parties according as they have respectively succeeded or failed. Bamasoondery Debia v. Rogers, *7 W. 96. ——— Set-off of costs ordered on the disposal of a preliminary point against costs awarded at the final disposal of the suit.—Costs of partly successful appeal.—It is not the usual practice, when costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order as to the partial costs. A prior decree having given the costs incurred on the disposal of a preliminary point to the party successfully raising it, a later decree, without expressly referring to the former, gave the costs of the suit, generally, to the opposite side. Held that the costs due under the prior decree should be set off against those due under the later. Although an appellant only partly succeeded in his appeal, the whole of his claim having been opposed in the Courts below on an untenable ground,—Held, that there was no reason for departing from the general rule that the defeated party should pay the costs. 97. ——— Suit for damages.—Decree for nominal damages.—Costs to defendant on difference.—Where a suit for damages was partially decreed on a finding of nominal damages, and costs on the amount undecreed were awarded to the defendant with interest,—Held that there was no good reason for such a course, and no ground of justice for saddling the plaintiff with defendant's costs. MOSSEHUN v. MUNOORUN . . 24 W. R., 69

98. ——— Consequential costs.—Partial relief.—Costs are not consequential upon partial relief being granted in a suit involving a much larger subject-matter, a portion of which is still sub judice, and cannot therefore be given by the High Court upon a decree of the Privy Council, if not provided for by the decree. The agreement was duly registered. On the 15th of June 1882, B. sued the Administrator General of Bengal, as administrator of A.'s estate, to recover certain sums of money, set forth in detail in the plaint, as having been received by A. and not accounted for, stating that they had been misappropriated by A. Held that, under the special terms of the Administrator General's Act, II of 1874, the plaintiff (having succeeded as to part of his claim only), was not entitled to any costs as against A.'s estate, but was liable to pay costs on the portion of his claim which was disallowed. S.*, who could explain nothing of her circumstances, or why she was residing in his house; but he stated that she had purchased the former plaintiff's right in the suit against a decree, she having been previously uninterested in the matter, and the only reason suggested for her doing so was that a small portion of the premises in question would serve for carrying out a religious purpose said to be entertained by her. The Court found that S. B. D. was only a sham plaintiff, and that J. C. S. was the real one, and the rule was made absolute. Held, that the words "another party" in section 187 of Act VIII of 1859 should be read as if identical with "another party to the suit." Held, also, that the Court cannot, by its judgment in any given suit, deal directly with persons not before it in that suit: that the Court has the same power of directing that the costs of any party to a suit for the recovery of land shall be paid by a person who is not on the record, as the late Supreme Court had, and as the Courts at Westminster still possess and exercise: that the recovery of costs from the real plaintiff in a suit in which the plaintiff on the record is only a sham one, is not a step in the proceedings in any particular suit, nor can it be made the subject of a separate plaint, but is of the nature of a substantive proceeding in personam, and is within the equitable

104. ———— Order for payment of costs by person not party to the suit, and after dismissal of suit.—Power of Mofussil Courts.—The plaintiffs brought a suit for the recovery of certain property, and R. and B. being desirous of entering into a transaction for the purpose of assisting the plaintiffs to recover it, agreed that they should receive one half the property that might be recovered in consideration of their assistance in recovering it; they thereupon purchased from the plaintiffs for a nominal sum one half their interest in the property, but instead of taking a conveyance in their own names and joining as plaintiffs in the suit, they took a conveyance in the name of one S., an indigent member of their family, and dependent on them for support, and caused the suit to be brought in the name of S. and the plaintiffs jointly. The Judge found that S. had been put forward by R. and B. in order to save themselves from having to pay the costs of the suits which were brought to establish the claim, in case they should be unsuccessful, and was of opinion that R. and B. were the real plaintiffs in the suit, though acting in the name of S. Two suits had then been brought by the plaintiffs and S., which were dismissed, and decrees for costs given in favour of the defendants; and the Judge ordered that the names of R. and B. should be added to the decrees for costs. Held, that though the Judge might have had power to make the order whilst the suits were pending before him, he had no power to make such order after dismissing the suits. 107. ———— Payment or security for costs by person not a party to the suit.—Suit against stranger to suit for costs.—Civil Procedure Code (1859) s. 73.—Where it appears that the plaintiff in a suit is in fact suing on behalf of another person who is not a party on the record, the ordinary practice is to require security for costs, and to stay the proceedings till it is given. The rejection by the Court of an application under Act VIII of 1859, section 73, to have a stranger, who has an interest in the suit, made a co-plaintiff on the record, cannot give a ground for an action against such stranger for costs incurred in the suit, which would not otherwise lie. The cases in which persons other than parties to the suit have been held liable to costs in England, relate to applications either in the cause itself or to the disciplinary and summary jurisdiction of the Courts. They give no support to the contention that an independent action will, under such circumstances, lie. RAM COOMAR COONDOO v. CHUNDERKANTO MOOKERJEE [I. L. R., 2 Calc., 233: L. R., 4 I. A., 23

120. ——— Administration suit.—Next friend.—Unnecessary suit.—Liability of next friend for costs.—Adoption of suit by plaintiff.—Costs of solicitor of next friend where suit unnecessary.—Solicitor's lien on estate recovered or preserved by suit.—Preservation of estate from future risk.—Appointment of receiver.—Insane executrix.—Act II of 1874, s. 35.—The plaintiff, who was a minor, sued by her next friend (her husband) for the administration of her father, Purshotam Ramji. The defendants in the suit were the plaintiff's mother, Nanbai, who was the widow and executrix of Purshotam Ramji, and one Burjorji, who had been appointed by Nanbai to act for her during her absence on pilgrimage. The plaint alleged that Nanbai was insane and unfit to manage the estate, and that Burjorji was mismanaging and wasting it. A receiver was appointed shortly after the filing of the suit. At the hearing the suit was dismissed as against Burjorji, and the Court ordered that his costs should be paid by the plaintiff's next friend, being of opinion that he was the real actor in the suit, and that it would be unfair to make the plaintiff's estate bear the costs of proceedings in which she had no real voice. The Court was further of opinion that at the time the suit was filed, Nanbai was not of unsound mind, but that she had subsequently become insane. The usual accounts were ordered to be taken as against Nanbai. The result of taking these accounts was that her administration of the estate as executrix was found to be unimpeachable, and in December 1883 the Court made an order directing that the next friend should pay the costs of the infant plaintiff. The next friend became insolvent, and his solicitors (the respondents) obtained an order from the Judge in chambers that the receiver should pay their costs out of the estate in his hands. The plaintiff appealed. The respondents contended that the plaintiff had adopted the suit, and that they had a lien for their costs—at any rate so far as they were incurred for the recovery and preservation of the estate. Held that the respondents were not entitled to be paid out of the estate. The plaintiff had done no overt act signifying her adoption of the suit, and the fact that she remained passive was consistent with her disapproval of it, as the decree did not immediately affect her, or require her to take action until the death of her mother Nanbai. Held, also, that the property in the hands of the receiver could not be held to have been recovered by means of the suit, as it appeared that the investments were of a perfectly legitimate nature; that there was no cause for alarm with respect to the safety of the property, and that the suit, so far as it was based on alleged danger to the estate, was quite uncalled for. It was argued for the respondents that the appointment of a receiver preserved the estate from future risk arising from the fact that the executrix Nanbai was of unsound mind. Held that the mere fact that the appointment of a receiver would preserve the estate from a possible danger in the future, could not bring the case within the ordinary rule as to solicitor's lien. 121. ——— Administrator General's Act II of 1874, s. 18 & s. 35.—Conflicting claims to property in possession of Administrator General under order of Court.—Costs of Administrator General in a suit to recover such property, how paid.—Expenses of taking care of such property incurred by Administrator General.—The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 were the daughters of one S., who died in Bombay on the 9th November 1885. Shortly after the death of S. the plaintiff went to Delhi, leaving certain ornaments and other valuables belonging to her locked up in a box, which also contained certain property which had belonged to her mother S. The box remained in the house in which the plaintiff had resided with S. The key of the box was taken by the plaintiff to Delhi. During the plaintiff's absence one of her sisters (defendant No. 3), presented a petition to the High Court, alleging that all the property in the said box belonged to her deceased mother S., and was in danger of being misappropriated by the plaintiff. Upon these allegations the Court on the 16th January 1886 made an order, under section 18 of Act II of 1874, directing the Administrator General to "take possession of the property of S., and hold the same, subject to the further order of the Court." Pursuant to this order the Administrator General took possession of the box and all its contents. The plaintiff, admitting that some of the ornaments in the box had belonged to the estate of S., sued to recover the remainder of the ornaments therein, which she alleged belonged to herself, and which she specified in a separate list. Defendant No. 3 denied her claim, and contended that all the property belonged to the estate of S. The other sisters of the plaintiff (defendants Nos. 2, 4, and 5) admitted the plaintiff's claim. The Court held that the plaintiff had proved her claim, and directed that her property should be delivered over to her by the Administrator General. Held, as to costs, that the Administrator General was in the position of an interpleading plaintiff, and that he was entitled, in the first instance, to recover his costs from the losing claimant (defendant No. 3). Failing recovery from defendant No. 3, he was entitled to be paid his costs out of the estate of S., and if and in so far as that estate proved insufficient, he was entitled to recover them out of the property which was the subject-matter of the suit. Held, also, that the costs of the Administrator General included the expenses incurred by him in taking care of the property entrusted to him by the order of the Court; such expenses to be apportioned according to the amounts respectively belonging to the estate of S. and to the plaintiff, and to be paid accordingly out of the said estate and out of the property of the plaintiff. On appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Court of first instance dismissing his suit, the lower Appellate Court demanded from the plaintiff Court-fees in respect of his plaint and memorandum of appeal computed on the market value of such house, the plaintiff having only paid in respect of those documents respectively the Court fees payable in a suit for a declaration of right where no consequential relief is prayed. Held that the market value of the property could not be taken by the lower Appellate Court to be the value of the relief sought, as the plaintiff did not seek possession of the property, and that, as the valuation of the relief sought rested with the plaintiff and not the Court, and as in this instance the declaration of right claimed necessarily carried with it the consequential relief sought, of which the value was merely nominal, further Court fees could not be demanded by the lower Appellate Court from the plaintiff. A person whose property was attached was not compelled to resort, in the first instance, to an application under section 246 of the late Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859). There was nothing to prevent him from commencing his litigation by a regular suit, if such were his pleasure. Clause 8 of section 7 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) would apply to such a suit. The language of that section is not limited to suits to set aside any special kind of attachments on land. It is large enough to include suits brought, in pursuance of the permission given by section 246 of Act VIII of 1859, to set aside attachments on land as well as other suits for that purpose brought independently of that section. The term "land" in clause 8, section 7, of the Court Fees Act does not include a house.

On the 2nd May 1883, the appellant paid the additional Court fees under protest, and a decree was then prepared, bearing date the 1st March 1883, but it referred to and carried into effect the subsequent order of the 21st March and the 2nd May. Per MAHMOOD, J., that as soon as the Judge had passed the decree of the 1st March 1883, he ceased to have any power over it, and was not competent to introduce new matters not dealt with by the judgment; that the order of the 21st March and the deposit of the 2nd May, whether right or wrong, were not proceedings to which effect could be given in the antecedent decree of the 1st March, 1883; and that the decree was ultra vires to that extent, and was therefore liable to correction in second appeal under section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code. The powers conferred by sections 54 (a) and (c) and 55 read with section 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, or by section 12 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) read with clause (ii) of section 10, are intended to be exercised before the disposal of the case, and not after it has been decided finally so far as the Court is concerned. The term "value" in the Act apparently means market value, and the market value of mortgaged property is the equity of redemption. An executor having applied for probate in respect of property which was alleged to be charged and mortgaged in excess of its value, no fee was charged for the probate of the will. In such a case, however, if it be found, when the accounts are filed, that sufficient stamp duty has not been paid, payment of any deficiency can be enforced. IN THE GOODS OF MACLEAN . . . . 6 N. The Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment, it is the duty of the Courts to treat such suits as belonging to the latter class (it being the more favourable for the suitor), and to impose fees accordingly. Decisions under section 246 of Act VIII of 1859, as to the removal or retention of attachments, are "summary decisions or orders" within the meaning of article 17, clause 1, schedule II, of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). The words "summary decision or order" in this clause of the Court Fees Act mean decision or order not made in a regular suit or appeal. The construction which has been given to these words, or nearly similar words, in the Limitation Acts (e.g., Act IX of 1871, schedule II, article 15, and Act XV of 1877, schedule II, article 13) affords no guide to their construction in the Court Fees Act. When Acts are in pari materia they may be treated as forming a Code, and may be read together; but when this is not so, the construction which has been put upon one cannot be relied upon as a guide to the construction of another. The valuation of suits, for the purpose of jurisdiction, is perfectly distinct from their valuation for the fiscal purpose of Court fees. Therefore Court Fees Acts, which are fiscal enactments, are not to be resorted to for construing enactments which fix the valuation of suits for the purpose of determining jurisdiction. Motichand Jaichand v. Dadabhai Pestonjee, 11 Bom., 186, explained. Ravlaji Tamoji v. *Dholapa Raghu, I. The plaint, which did not state any amount as the value of the claim, bore a R10 stamp. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaint ought to have been stamped according to the value of the plaintiff's claim. Held by the High Court, on appeal, that the plaint was properly stamped under schedule II, article 17, clause 1, of Act VII of 1870, as the suit was a suit to set aside a summary decision of a Civil Court not established by Letters Patent. 7. ——— Suit to set aside summary decision.—Suit to establish right.—The plaintiffs alleged in their plaint as follows: Certain property having been attached in execution of a decree, their mother, the wife of the judgment-debtor, objected to the attachment on the ground that the property had previously come into her possession under a transfer by sale in lieu of her dower-debt. The plaintiff's mother died pending the determination of the objection, having devised her property to the plaintiffs. They succeeded to the same, and certain other property, which also had been transferred to their mother in lieu of her dower-debt, having been also attached in execution of the same decree, the plaintiffs objected to the attachment. The Court executing the decree passed orders disallowing both objections. Upon these allegations the plaintiffs claimed to set aside both orders. They paid, with reference to clause 1, article 17, schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, a Court fee of R20 on their plaint, but the Court of first instance held that this was not sufficient, and that the Court fee should be calculated on the amount of the decree in execution of which the property had been attached. Held that, looking at the nature of the reliefs sought, clause i, article 17, schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, was applicable, and that a R10 stamp in respect of each order sought to be set aside was payable. Dayachand Nemchand v. *Hemchand Dharamchand, I. The objection was disallowed, and she thereupon brought a suit, with reference to the provisions of section 181 (b) of the Rent Act, (1) to establish her right to the property; (2) to set aside the order passed on her objection. Held that, looking at the nature of the reliefs sought, clauses (1) and (3), article 17, schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, were applicable, and that the plaintiff should pay a ten-rupee stamp on each of her claims. Fatima Begam v. *Sukh Ram, I. A suit praying for such a declaration as the above, and also for a positive order in the nature of a mandatory injunction for the production of the defendants' books and property in their hands, or a suit praying for such declaration as the above, and also for a positive decree for an account to be taken by the Court, and for the production of the books and property, would range under section 7, clause 4, article (c) of Act VII of 1870, as being a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed," and also within article (d) of the same section, as being a suit "to obtain an injunction;" and a suit of the third species described above would fall under article (f) of the same clause, as being a suit "for accounts." Quære,—Whether, in the case of a suit for a declaration of the right of the plaintiff to an account and to inspection of the defendants' books, and for a mandatory injunction for the production of those books, or of a suit for such declaration and for a positive decree for the taking of an account by the Court and the production of the defendants' books, the plaint would, by virtue of section 17 of Act VII of 1870, require separate stamps under articles (d) and (f) of clause 4, section 7, or be sufficiently covered by the stamp under article (c) of the same clause; and whether, assuming the declaration and the account each to require a stamp, the prayer for an injunction or order for the production of books is not merely ancillary to, and not a distinct subject from, the taking of an account. Quære,—Whether the provision in section 7, clause 4 of Act VII of 1870, that the amount of the fee payable in suits falling within that clause shall be computed "according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint," is so inconsistent with that portion of section 31 of Act VIII of 1859 which permits the Court receiving the plaint to revise the valuation of the claim as to render that portion of section 31 of Act VIII of 1859 inoperative in suits within section 7, clause 4 of Act VII of 1870, notwithstanding the concluding passage in that clause. Quære,—Whether the concluding passage in clause 4, section 7, of Act VII of 1870 is too express to admit of a limitation of the power of the Judge, and leaves him the right to revise the valuation placed on suits under clause 4 by the plaintiff. But, assuming this to be so, it would, generally, not be advisable that the Judge should enhance the valuation on the reception of the plaint. The fee payable under section 7, clause 4 of Act VII of 1870 is according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint, and not the value of the subject-matter of the plaint. The view taken by the Courts of the Regulation and Acts concerned with the Courts of Wards in Bengal is, that although the possession of a revenue-paying property is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards attaching, yet when once that jurisdiction has attached, all the property of the ward comes under the control and management of the Court. Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. *Rutta Koer, 11 Moore's I. 10. ——— *Disqualification to contract.—Beng. Reg. That Regulation must be construed strictly, the provisions requiring the Collector to report to the Board a female as disqualified, and the subsequent procedure thereon should be strictly carried out, as not mere matters of form, but necessary preliminaries, before the female can be considered disqualified. From the absence of the observance of those provisions in the case of *R. 11. ——— Beng. Reg. LII of 1803.—Incompetency of disqualified proprietor to contract.—Under section 7 of Regulation LII of 1803, lakhiraj lands belonging to a disqualified proprietor may be committed by the Government (on its appearing that this will be for its interests and those of such proprietor) to the charge of the Court of Wards; and, thereupon, the whole estate and effects, real and personal, of such proprietor, become vested in that Court. An estate consisting of lakhiraj lands was duly placed under the management of the Court of Wards, the proprietress, a Mahomedan, being disqualified under the Regulation. This ward having then become a party to a mortgage of such lands to secure repayment of money advanced to her, it was held that she neither bound herself nor charged the estate. This case distinguished from Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Rutta Koer, 11 Moore's I. A., 478 : where the proprietress, no intention to treat her as disqualified having been shown, was adjudged capable of contracting, though the Court of Wards was in possession of her estate. On the facts of this case it was also held that, although the Court had given to this ward an authority, under certain limitations of which the plaintiff had notice, to borrow money for a special purpose, there had not been such a holding out to the world of her competency as would have induced any reasonable person to suppose that she had power to make the contract on which this suit was brought. BALKRISHNA v. MASUMA BIBI

15. ——— Release of property from superintendence of Collector.—North-West Provinces Land Revenue Acts, XIX of 1873, ss. 194-195, and VIII of 1879, s. 20.—Disqualified proprietor.—M., a female proprietor, brought a suit to recover possession of certain lands, which were in the hands of the Collector, as manager of the Court of Wards, on the allegations that she had placed the property in the hands of the Court some years previously, because she was not at that time in a position to manage it herself, but that she was now capable of managing it, and desired to get it back. The suit was dismissed, and the plaintiff appealed on the ground, inter alia, that inasmuch as she was not a "disqualified proprietor" within the meaning of Act XIX of 1873 (North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act), the Court of Wards had no jurisdiction to take the property, and that its possession was merely the result of an arrangement to which she was a consenting party, and which she now desired to terminate. Held that, with reference to the provisions of Act XIX of 1873, and Act VIII of 1879 (North-West Provinces Land Revenue Acts), the suit as brought was not maintainable, inasmuch as there was no evidence that the plaintiff had obtained the previous sanction of the local Government to the release of the property from the superintendence of the Court of Wards, as required by section 20 of the latter Act. Held, also, that the plaintiff could not be allowed in appeal entirely to change the nature of the grounds upon which she alleged herself to be entitled to claim relief, and that hence she could not now raise the plea that the Court of Wards, in taking the property under its management, had acted without jurisdiction. The expression "Local Government" in sections 194 and 195 of Act XIX of 1873, and section 20 of Act VIII of 1879, means the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. Act IV of 1870.—Death of minor. — Right of suit. — Held, with reference as well to section 79, Bengal Act IV of 1870, as to the justice and equity of the case, that the power of the Court of Wards to represent the estate or bring a suit on behalf of a minor does not cease with the death of the minor. SOOMUNGUL KOOER v. COURT OF WARDS . . . 17 W. R., 560

17. ——— Minor.—Irregular procedure.—On 27th July 1871, a disqualified proprietor, B., signed a duly attested document, declaring he had adopted a boy, by name D., the next heir R. signing a declaration of his approval of the adoption. Before sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor could be obtained under Bengal Act IV of 1870, section 74, B. died, and the sanction was subsequently refused on the ground of B.'s death. On application made under Act XXVII of 1860, the Judge, on 28th March 1872, found the adoption good, and appointed one P. to be guardian of the minor D., and directed the estate to be placed under the management of the Court of Wards. M., a judgment-creditor of R.'s, failing to execute his decree against the estate of B., brought a suit to have it declared that R., as heir, had inherited all B.'s property, and that he, M., was entitled to have that property attached and sold in satisfaction of his decree. The only defendants were A. H., manager under the Court of Wards, and R. The Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree, declaring that D. was not the legally adopted son of B. This was appealed from. Held that the Judge had no power to make any such order as that of the 28th March 1872, in regard to the Court of Wards. What he had power to do under Act XL of 1858, section 12, was to direct the Collector to take charge of the estate, and it would then have become the duty of the Collector to appoint a manager and a guardian in the same manner, &c., as if the minor's property and person were subject to the Court of Wards. Held that the minor's interests were not properly represented before the Subordinate Judge, whose decree therefore could not stand so as to affect the minor, and that the minor must be made a party strictly in the manner prescribed by Bengal Act IV of 1870, section 69. It was urged before the High Court that the conviction could not be sustained, as the accused was a partner with the prosecutor. Held by JACKSON, J., that the finding of the Magistrate and Sessions Judge on the evidence was to the effect that the prisoner was not a partner but a servant; that such finding could not be interfered with by the High Court as a Court of Revision, unless there was a mistake in law; that the finding was correct in law; that the defence of the prisoner could not be taken to mean to say that he was a partner, but merely that he claimed a small share in the profits, and that such claim did not make him a partner, an agent's remuneration being a share in the profits not constituting the agent a partner. Held, by KEMP and MITTER, JJ. (releasing the prisoner), that though the allowance of a portion of the profits or goods does not destroy the relation of master and servant, the accused in this case distinctly pleaded he was a partner, and not only that he was entitled to a share in the profits; that the lower Courts did not specifically decide that the accused was a servant; and that the prosecutor's remedy was a civil suit for an account. 2. ———— Irregularity.—Waiver or consent by prisoner.—Recording statements of witnesses.—The jailor of a district jail being accused by one of the jail clerks of falsifying his accounts and defrauding the Government, the matter was enquired into by the District Magistrate, and the jailor was, by the Magistrate's order, placed on trial before a Bench of Magistrates, consisting of the District Magistrate himself, L., the Officiating Superintendent of the Jail, and three other Honorary Magistrates. The prisoner and his pleaders were alleged to have stated before the commencement of the trial on being questioned that they had no objection to the composition of the Bench, but after the charges had been framed, the prisoner's counsel objected to the Bench as formed. The District Magistrate directed the Government pleader to prosecute, and both the District Magistrate and L. gave evidence for the prosecution. After the case for the prosecution was closed, two formal charges were drawn up, namely, that the prisoner had debited Government with the price of more oil-seed than he actually purchased, and that he had received payment for certain oil at a higher rate than he credited to Government. The moneys, the receipt of which were the subject of the first charge, were obtained by the prisoner on the strength of certain vouchers which he had induced L. to sign as correct, and L. had sanctioned the sale at the rates credited to Government. Upon the prisoner's giving the names of the witnesses he intended to call in his defence, L. was deputed by his brother Magistrates to examine some of them who were connected with the jail, in order "to guard against deviation," and the depositions so taken were placed on the record, "to be used by either party, though not themselves, as evidence." The prisoner was convicted. On a motion to quash the conviction,—Held that the recording the statements of the prisoner's witnesses was irregular. 5. ——— Summary jurisdiction wrongly exercised.—Unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons.—Splitting offence.—Right of appeal, Deprivation of.—No Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction. If a charge of an offence not triable summarily is laid and sworn to, the Magistrate must proceed with the case accordingly, unless he is at the outset in a position to show from the deposition of the complainant that the circumstances of aggravation are really mere exaggeration and not to be believed. Therefore, a Magistrate, when he has before him a person charged with having been armed with a deadly weapon while a member of an unlawful assembly, is not at liberty to disregard that part of the charge which charges the prisoner with having been armed with a deadly weapon, and so to give himself jurisdiction to try the case summarily, and then by inflicting a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months to deprive the prisoner of his right of appeal. 6. ——— Accused affirmed and examined.—Appointment of Magistrate who convicted accused to be Crown Prosecutor.—Right of prisoners to converse privately with pleader.—Magistrates sitting on bench in Judge's Court during trial.—Upon an enquiry which the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to make into an allegation that a confession was made under such circumstances as to be inadmissible in evidence, the prisoners were ordered to be, and were, solemnly affirmed and the prosecution neither objected to the form of the order nor to the affirmation of the prisoners, and moreover cross-examined them, but objected to their evidence being used upon the return of the enquiry,—It was held that the objection, though possibly good if taken in time, was too late, and that the evidence of the prisoners might be used, whether the order directing them to be affirmed was correct or otherwise. The appointment of the Magistrate, who, in the first instance, had tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an enquiry subsequently directed in the same case, censured as being unprecedented and objectionable. A Public Prosecutor should be without a personal interest in the cases which he conducts. Prisoners should be allowed to have free converse with their vakeels out of the hearing of the police officers in charge of such prisoners. It is undesirable that Magistrates whose decisions are under appeal, or who have been engaged in promoting the prosecution, or police officers concerned in a case, should sit on the bench beside, or converse privately in Court with, the Judge who is engaged in trying the prisoners' appeal. If the Appellate Judge wishes to ascertain any facts relating to the case from the Magistrate who convicted the accused, he should examine the Magistrate upon oath or solemn affirmation, in the same manner as an ordinary witness. 14. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 491, 530.—Dispute likely to cause breach of the peace.—Decision on title by Civil Court.—Police report, Incorporation of, by reference.—On the 20th of March 1879, A. applied to have certain lands, which he had lately purchased registered in his name. The order of the Deputy Collector, declaring that A. had proved possession and was entitled to registration, was not passed until the 24th December 1879. Prior to A.'s purchase, B. and C. had, on the 6th March 1879, obtained registration of the same property. The proceedings were sent to the Commissioner, who, on the 29th September 1880, declared A. to be entitled to the land; and in October the registration in the names of B. and C. was cancelled, and A.'s name was finally registered. In July 1880, proceedings under section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code were commenced upon the petition of certain ryots, who alleged that other ryots, at the instigation of A., were going to do acts which would lead to a breach of the peace. The Deputy Magistrate, the same person who, as Deputy Collector, had decided the land-registration case in favour of A., proceeded under section 530 to consider the question as to who was in possession, and found that B. and C. were in possession. Held that the Deputy Magistrate could not, in these proceedings, set aside the order which he had made in the registration case, as that order could only be set aside in a regular suit. The proceedings recorded by the Deputy Magistrate did not set forth in express language that he was satisfied that a dispute likely to create a breach of the peace existed in respect of the land in question, between A. on the one side, and B. and C. on the other; nor did it set forth the grounds upon which he was so satisfied that such dispute existed. Held that the proceeding was therefore defective. After the close of the case for the prosecution in one of these cases, the Sessions Judge, with the consent of the pleaders representing the accused, postponed the taking of the evidence for the defence, and proceeded to examine the witnesses for the prosecution in the counter-case before the same jury. The Court then took the evidence of the witnesses for the defence in the first, and in the counter-case, in the order named, and after hearing the address of the various pleaders for the defence and the reply of the Government Pleader, proceeded to sum up the facts in both cases to the jury, who returned a verdict in respect of all the accused. Held, that the procedure resorted to by the Judge was a practical violation of the salutary rule which necessitated the keeping of trials in such cases distinctly separate, and that its adoption having materially prejudiced the interests of the accused, the convictions should be set aside. Queen v. *Bazu, B. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (Act X of 1882), s. 45 (1872, s. 90)—continued.

Agent of owner of land.—Per MARKBY, J.—A khazanchi is not an "agent" within the meaning of section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A dewan may be an "agent" if his master is absent, but the provisions of section 90 do not apply to a dewan who is acting only under the orders of his resident master. Per PRINSEP, J.—Quære,—Whether, according to section 90, an agent is only responsible for giving information of the occurrence of any sudden or unnatural death. EMPRESS v. ACHIRAJ LALL

3. ——— Omission to give information of offence.—The provisions of section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be put in force against one who has omitted to give information to the police of an offence having been committed in cases where the police have actually obtained such information from other sources. EMPRESS v. SHASHI BHUSAN CHUCKRABUTTY. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SHASHI BHUSAN CHUCKRABUTTY . . . I. L. R., 4 Calc., 623

4. ——— Omission to give information of offence.—Order to assist the police.—Illegal order.—A Magistrate directed a landholder to "find a clue" in a case of theft "within fifteen days and to assist the police." Held that such order was not authorised by sections 90 and 91 of Act X of 1872, and the conviction of the landholder for disobedience of such order was not maintainable. EMPRESS v. BAKSHUN RAM . . I. L. R., 3 All., 201

5. ——— Omission to give information of offence.—Specification of offence.—In a case in which the accused are charged with having omitted to give information which they were legally bound to give under section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it should appear what the offence is as to the commission of which the accused wilfully omitted to give information, that the specified offence was in fact committed by some one, and that the accused knew of its having been committed. QUEEN v. AHMED ALI . 22 W. R., Cr., 42

6. ——— Omission to give information of offence.—Residence.—Liability of resident agent.—The duty imposed by Act X of 1872, section 90, upon village headmen, &c., of giving information as to the occurrence of any sudden or unnatural death is intended to apply only when such occurrence takes place at or near the village of which he is headman, or in which he owns or occupies land, &c. Residence in a dwelling-house belonging to another is not occupation of land within the meaning of the section. The liability of the resident agent of an owner under the section arises when the owner is not resident and has no personal knowledge of the fact required to be reported; where the owner has such knowledge, the liability attaches to him. ——— s. 176 (1872, s. 135).—Enquiry into cause of death.—Report by Magistrate.—Judicial proceeding.—Power of High Court under s. 296, Criminal Procedure Code.—Coroner's inquest.—Where the Magistrate of a division held an enquiry, under section 135 of the Criminal Procedure Code, into the cause of the death of a person found dead under suspicious circumstances, and, without making a specific charge against any person, drew up a report embodying the result of his enquiry, and sent the report to the Magistrate of the district, and subsequently proceedings were taken against one of the witnesses, which ultimately resulted in an acquittal,—Held by the High Court, that there being nothing in the language of section 135 requiring the Magistrate holding such an enquiry either to make a report or to come to a finding, the report actually sent could not be considered as part of a judicial proceeding, and that therefore the High Court had no power to send for it under section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code. ——— (1872, s. 466).—Acts done by public servant.—Sanction to prosecution.—Mahalkari.—Section 466 of the Code of Criminal Procedure extends to all acts ostensibly done by a public servant, i.e., to acts which would have no special signification except as acts done by a public servant; therefore, a mahalkari charged with fabricating the proceedings of a case decided before himself, could not be tried on that charge except with the sanction specified in that section. Paragraph 1 of section 466, which mentions a sanction by Government or its deputy, is intended to apply, at least chiefly, to the cases of persons specially responsible to Government, such as accountants who have failed in their duty; and paragraph 2, which speaks of sanction by Government alone, to persons professing to exercise certain authority, and with that pretext doing an act which is impeached by a subject, on the ground of its being wholly unwarranted, or of an excess or impropriety of some kind. A mahalkari falls within the class of public servants contemplated in paragraph 1

1. ——— Deposition taken before Magistrate.—Evidence before Sessions Judge.—Discretion of Sessions Judge.—The purpose of section 249 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended by section 20 of Act XI of 1874, is to make depositions given before Magistrates in the preliminary inquiry evidence in the trial before the Court of Session, only when the Sessions Judge determines, in the exercise of his discretion, that they are to be used in this way. But the exercise of this discretion, considering it as a matter of fact or law, is open to review by the Appellate Court. REG. v. ARJUN MEGHA . . . . . 11 Bom., 281

2. ——— Former deposition of witness.—Evidence Act, s. 80.—The confession of a witness in the shape of a former deposition can be used as evidence against a prisoner only on the condition prescribed by section 249, Criminal Procedure Code, 1872,—that is, it must have been duly taken by the committing officer in the presence of the person against whom it is to be used. The certificate of the Magistrate appended to such confession in order to afford primâ facie evidence, under section 80 of the Evidence Act, of the circumstances mentioned in it relative to the taking of the statement, ought to give the fact snecessary to render the deposition admissible under section 249. QUEEN v. NUSSURUDDIN . . . . . 21 W. R., Cr., 5

3. ——— Depositions taken before Magistrate.—A Court of Session is not at liberty, under Act X of 1872, section 249, to ground its judgment on the depositions taken by the Magistrate without taking the examinations of the witnesses afresh. QUEEN v. MAJOHUR ROY
[24 W. R., Cr., 11

4. ——— Witnesses before committing Magistrate.—On the trial of a prisoner for the murder of his wife and child, the witnesses for the prosecution gave evidence contradicting the evidence given by them before the committing Magistrate: and the Sessions Judge, purporting to act under section 249, Act X of 1872, discarded the evidence taken before himself, and grounded his judgment on the evidence given before the Magistrate, and on this evidence convicted the prisoner, and sentenced him to death. On appeal by the prisoner,—Held that section 249 did not warrant such a course of proceeding. That section merely authorises the Court to take a particular statement made by a witness before the Magistrate as the true statement, notwithstanding that it is denied, or a statement inconsistent with it was made by the witness before the Judge, only if the Judge should see that the original statement was worthy of belief, and does not mean that the Court should discard wholly the testimony of witnesses before it and have recourse to the testimony of the same persons given before another officer. 5. ——— Depositions in former case.—Refusal to allow cross-examination of witnesses.—A., B., and C. having been charged with murder before a Magistrate, two vakeels presented their vakalutnamahs, and applied to be allowed to conduct the defence of the accused. The Magistrate refused permission, and, after recording the depositions of the witnesses, committed the accused to take their trial before the Sessions Court. In the Court of the Magistrate the only material evidence for the prosecution was that of three witnesses, who, on being examined in the Sessions Court, denied all knowledge of the facts to which they had deposed before the Magistrate. Two of them denied having made the statements recorded, while the third admitted the statements attributed to him, but asserted they were false and made under pressure. The Sessions Judge, disbelieving the statements made in his Court, thereupon, under section 249 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (as amended by section 20 of the Amending Act), used the previous depositions as evidence in the case, and mainly upon these convicted the accused of murder and sentenced them to transportation for life. Against this conviction and sentence the prisoners appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the previous depositions ought not to have been used as evidence in the case as the Magistrate had refused to allow their pleaders to appear and cross-examine the witnesses who made the depositions. The High Court affirmed the convictions and sentence. IN THE MATTER OF DHAM MUNDUL

1. ——— Deaf and dumb person.—Procedure.—G. was convicted by the Joint Magistrate of house-breaking by night, with intent to commit theft, and the case referred under the provisions of section 186 of Act X of 1872 to the High Court for orders. It appeared that G., whose understanding was of the most limited character, was caught at night in a house with some anklets in his possession. He was a lad of 15 or 16 years of age, and had been deaf and dumb from his birth. He sometimes lived with his father and sometimes by begging, and there was little doubt that hunger had driven him to break into the house. He had never been in arrest before. The Court recommended that he should be made over to his father. QUEEN v. GANGA . . . . . 7 N. W., 131

Held, on reference to the High Court, that as the words "Sessions case" in section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code had reference only to a case triable exclusively by a Court of Session, the Magistrate's action could not be supported under that section, but that (as further evidence in addition to that taken by the Deputy Magistrate was forthcoming) it was sustainable on the principle laid down in Empress v. *Donnelly, I. 7. ——— Discharge of accused persons under s. 215.—Revival of proceedings at the instance of the Court of Session.—Commitment of accused persons.—Certain persons were charged under section 417 of the Penal Code, and were discharged by the Magistrate inquiring into the offence, under section 215 of Act X of 1872. The Court of Session, considering that the accused persons had been improperly discharged, forwarded the record to the Magistrate of the District, suggesting to him to make the case over to a Subordinate Magistrate, with directions to inquire into any offence, other than the offence in respect of which the accused persons had been discharged, which the evidence on the record showed to have been committed. The Subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over made an inquiry, and committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session on charges under sections 363 and 420 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the Court of Session was not competent to "direct the accused persons to be committed," under section 296 of Act X of 1872, the case not being a "Sessions case," within the meaning of that section, and that the commitment was consequently illegal. Held that there was no "direction to commit" within the meaning of that section, that is to say, to send the accused persons at once to the Sessions Court, without further inquiry, and whether or not the inquiry was made in consequence of the suggestions of the Court of Session was immaterial, and that the inquiry upon the charges under sections 363 and 420 of the Penal Code was rightly held by the Subordinate Magistrate and the commitment could not be impeached. 8. ——— Discharge by Magistrate, —Order of commitment by Sessions Judge.—Omission to call on accused to show cause against such commitment.—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 296, 283.—A Sessions Court has no power, under section 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the commitment of a person discharged by a Deputy Magistrate, without first giving such person an opportunity of showing cause against such commitment. But under section 296, as amended by Act XI of 1874, the Court has power to direct the subordinate Court to enquire into any offences for which it considers a commitment should be ordered. When, however, a trial under such a commitment made by order of a Sessions Judge has been duly held, and no actual failure of justice has been caused by the error of the Sessions Judge, section 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be a bar to the reversal of his judgment. A trial for the offence of cheating is not a Sessions case within the meaning of section 296, having regard to the first portion of the definition of Sessions case in section 4 of the Code, which must be read as if the word "only" followed the words "triable by a Court of Sessions." The Court accordingly was of opinion that if the accused had no opportunity given them of meeting the charge, the commitment was not a good commitment. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BUNDHOO

7. ——————— Further enquiry.—A Deputy Magistrate having discharged a person accused of an offence, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient for conviction, the Magistrate of the district recorded an order stating that, in his opinion, the accused had been improperly discharged, and directing, under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, that further inquiry should be made, and the accused called on to enter upon his defence. The accused was not called upon to show cause why a further inquiry should not be made, but a summons in the terms of section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code was issued to him. On his appearance, he was tried by the Magistrate of the District, convicted, and sentenced. The witnesses for the prosecution were not recalled, but the Magistrate relied upon their evidence as recorded in the first trial, and also upon the statement of a witness for the defence which was not receivable in evidence. Held that the proceedings of the Magistrate of the District were irregular, first, because notice to show cause why action should not be taken against him in the terms of section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not served upon the accused person before proceedings, ostensibly under that section, were commenced; and, secondly, because the subsequent proceedings of the Magistrate were not such as are contemplated by the provisions of section 437, inasmuch as the conviction was practically based upon evidence which was not recorded in the course of a "further inquiry" before the Magistrate of the district, but upon evidence which was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate, and had been adjudicated upon by that officer; and such irregularities were fatal to the conviction. Subsequently the Magistrate of the district, relying upon sections 248 and 259 and professing to act under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the Deputy Magistrate to send up the parties and proceed regularly with the case. Held further, that in addition to the Magistrate's order not being warranted by the fact, it was ultra vires, inasmuch as the Deputy Magistrate was a Magistrate of the first class and not "inferior" to the District Magistrate, and to give the District Magistrate jurisdiction to call for a record under section 435 from another Magistrate and to act under section 437, the latter must be inferior. Nobin Kristo Mookerjee v. *Russick Lall Laha, I. The term "further inquiry" in section 437 is not restricted to "inquiry upon further materials or further or additional evidence." Before directing further inquiry under section 437 it is not obligatory on the District Magistrate to give notice to the person discharged, or against whom the complaint was dismissed. 1. ———— Act XXIII of 1861, s. 16.—Sending case for investigation by Magistrate.—A Subordinate Judge, finding that a person had made a false verification of a plaint, sent his case for investigation to a Magistrate of the district, who refused to investigate it on the ground that the alleged offence was one triable exclusively by the Court of Session, to which the Subordinate Judge himself should, under section 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, have committed it.—Held that the Magistrate of the district was bound to proceed with the investigation of the case, according to section 16 of Act XXIII of 1861. REG. v. AMRUTA NATH . 7 Bom., Cr., 29

2. ———— Preliminary enquiry.—Procedure.—Under section 471, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court must first make a preliminary enquiry to satisfy itself that a specific charge coming under the sections mentioned in it ought to be preferred against the accused; and after being so satisfied it must either commit the case or send the case to the Magistrate for enquiry whether a committal should be made or not. 4. ———— Act XXIII of 1861, s. 16.—Order sending case to Magistrate for enquiring into offence of giving false evidence.—Preliminary enquiry.—Vagueness of charge.—Although section 16 of Act XXIII of 1861 gives Civil Courts powers similar to those conferred on Civil and Criminal Courts alike by section 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the whole law as to the procedure in cases within those sections is now embodied in section 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In a suit brought to recover possession of certain property, the Judge decided one of the issues raised in the plaintiff's favour, but on the important issue as to whether the plaintiff ever had possession, he found for the defendant. The plaintiff was not examined, but on the issue as to possession he called two witnesses. The Judge disbelieved their statements, and considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case, gave judgment for the defendant without requiring him to give evidence on that issue. In the concluding paragraph of his judgment, the Judge directed the depositions of the two witnesses above referred to, together with the English memoranda of their evidence, to be sent to the Magistrate, with a view to his enquiring whether or not they had voluntarily given false evidence in a judicial proceeding; and he further directed the Magistrate to enquire whether or not the plaintiff had abetted the offence of giving false evidence, on the ground that as the witnesses were the plaintiff's servants he must personally have influenced them, and also to enquire whether the plaint which the plaintiff had attested contained averments which he knew to be false. On a motion to quash this order,—Held that, under section 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge had no power to send a case to a Magistrate except when, after having made such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary, he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground (i.e., ground of a nature higher than mere surmise or suspicion) for directing judicial enquiry into the matter of a specific charge, and that the Judge is bound to indicate the particular statements or averments in respect of which he considers that there is ground for a charge into which the Magistrate ought to enquire, and that the order was bad because the Judge had made no preliminary enquiry and because it was too vague and general in its character. 8. ———Institution of criminal prosecution pending appeal in Civil Court.—If, in the course of a proceeding, either civil or criminal, a Judge or Magistrate finds clear ground for believing that either the parties to the proceeding or their witnesses have committed perjury or any other offence against public justice, he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such person under section 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code without any further enquiry than that which he has already held in his own Court. As a matter of discretion and propriety, it is right for a Court, before committing a person on a charge of perjury upon his own uncontradicted statement, to await the hearing of the appeal, where an appeal is pending, in the case in which he is charged with such perjury. IN THE MATTER OF MUTTY LALL GHOSE [I. L. R., 6 Calc., 308

9. ——— Power to commit for offences.—Section 471 deals with a more extended class of cases, viz., all those mentioned in sections 467, 468, and 469, in which not merely a Civil Court but any Court, Civil or Criminal, and whether possessing or not possessing the power to commit to the Court of Session, is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for holding an inquiry; and it enacts the procedure to be followed by the Court which may elect to adopt one of two courses, that is to say, it may either commit a case to the Court of Session, if and where it has the power to do so, or if it has not that power or is not disposed to exercise it, it may send the case to a Magistrate having power to try or commit for trial the accused person for the offence charged. 11. ——— Preliminary inquiry.—An order made under section 471 of Act X of 1872 sending a case for inquiry to a Magistrate is not necessarily bad because the Court did not make a preliminary inquiry before making such order. The law requires only such preliminary inquiry as "may be necessary." Held, therefore, where a Munsif, being of opinion that both the parties to a suit tried by him had given false evidence therein on certain points, sent the case for inquiry to the Magistrate under section 471 of Act X of 1872, with a proceeding embodying the facts of the case, and charging the parties respectively with giving false evidence on such points, and there was nothing to show that any inquiry that the Munsif could have made was necessary or would have put the Magistrate into a better position for dealing with the case than he was in, that the Munsif's proceedings were not bad because he did not hold a preliminary inquiry. 1. ——— Penal Code, s. 441.—Intention to annoy.—To bring an act of trespass within the meaning of the Penal Code, section 441, the entry upon the land must be with the intent to annoy, which means with the purpose of annoying the person in possession. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SHIB NATH BANERJEE . 24 W. R., Cr., 58

2. ——— Intention to annoy.—Being on land in assertion of title.—Where the trespass (if any) was not committed with the intent to commit an offence, or intimidate, insult, or annoy the persons in possession, but in the bond fide assertion of a claim of title, this does not amount to criminal trespass. QUEEN ON THE PROSECUTION OF GOCUL CHAND v. SEITH ROSHUN LAL

3. ——— Intention to annoy.—Causing loss or injury.—A. built a hut on portion of certain disputed land to which he laid claim, and was, on the prosecution of another claimant to the land, convicted of criminal trespass under section 441 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was bad, as in erecting the hut, it was not the intention of the accused to annoy. Loss or injury would naturally cause annoyance, but not the kind of annoyance contemplated by section 441 of the Penal Code. SHUMBHU NATH SARKAR v. RAM KAMAL GUHA

4. ——— Intention to annoy.—Enclosing and cultivating portion of burial-ground.—Defendant was convicted of criminal trespass for having enclosed and commenced to cultivate a portion of a burial-ground. Held that the conviction was right. The person (corporate) in possession of the burial-ground is the portion of the public entitled to use the burial-ground, and the act of ploughing up the burial-ground was evidence of intent to annoy such person, the defendant not being one of the portion of the public entitled to its use. 5. ——— Intention to annoy.—Taking portion of public foot-path as one's own land.—Defendant was convicted of criminal trespass for including in his own land a portion of a public foot-path. Held that, as the public generally were entitled to the use of the foot-path, there was no illegal entry of the defendant on property in the possession of another with intent to annoy the person in possession, and consequently that the defendant was wrongly convicted. 8. ——— Land dispute.—Title to land, Failure to prove.—Held by JACKSON, J. (setting aside the order of the Magistrate; MARKBY, J., dissenting), that a Magistrate ought not to decline to go into a case of criminal trespass under section 441 of the Penal Code because the complainant did not make out his title to the land: the offence may be committed in respect of property in a person's possession, even though such possession may not have originated in right. 13. ——— Entering on land after decree giving another possession.—Accused was ejman of complainant's family. Complainant obtained a decree setting aside an alienation made by accused. In execution, complainant obtained possession from the alienee. The accused entered on this land. Held, that he had not committed the offence of criminal trespass. ANONYMOUS [6 Mad., Ap., 19

14. ——— Re-entry into, or remaining on, land from which person has been ejected by civil process.—Certain immoveable property was the joint undivided property of C., G., and a certain other person. R. obtained a decree against G. for the possession of such property, and such property was delivered to hi min the execution of that decree in accordance with the provisions of section 264 of Act X of 1877. C., in good faith, with the intention of asserting her right, and without any intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy R., or to commit an offence, and G., in like manner, with the intention of asserting the right of his co-owners, remained on such property. Held that, under such circumstances, they could not be convicted of criminal trespass. Re-entry into or remaining upon land from which a person has been ejected by civil process, or of which possession has been given to another for the purpose of asserting rights he may have solely or jointly with other persons, is not criminal trespass, unless the intent to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult, or annoy, is conclusively proved. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GOBIND PRASAD. I. L. R., 2 All., 465

15. ——— Entry on land in exercise of claim of right.—Mischief.—If a person enters on land in the possession of another in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right, and without any intention to intimidate, insult, or annoy such other person, or to commit an offence, then, though he may have no right to the land, he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass. So also, if a person deals injuriously with property in the bonâ fide belief that it is his own, he cannot be convicted of mischief. The mere assertion, however, in such cases of a claim of right is not in itself a sufficient answer to charges of criminal trespass and mischief. It is the duty of the Criminal Court to determine what was the intention of the alleged offender, and if it arrives at the conclusion that he was not acting in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right, then it cannot refuse to convict the offender, assuming that the other facts are established which constitute the offence. EMPRESS OF INDIA v. BUDH SINGH . I. L. R., 2 All., 101

16. ——— Acting in exercise of right of distraint.—Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), ss. 72, 74, 76.—A., the servant of B., was convicted of criminal trespass in going upon the land of C., one of B.'s tenants, and preventing him from cutting his crops. B. was convicted of abetment of criminal trespass. A. and B. pleaded that they were acting in the exercise of the legal right of distraint. It appeared that no written demand under section 72 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) for the amount of the arrears, together with an account exhibiting the grounds on which demand had been made, was served on C., and that no written authority under section 76 had been given by B. to A. Held, that it lay upon A. and B. to show that they had conformed to the provisions of the law, or at least had acted with the bonâ fide intention of distraining the complainant's crops; and that the conviction was right. Held, also, that as, under section 74, standing crops and ungathered products may, notwithstanding distraint, be reaped and gathered by the cultivator, A. had no right, even if he was acting bonâ fide, to restrain C. from cutting his crops. JHUMUK NONIAH v. SHADASHIB ROY [I. L. R., 7 Calc., 26

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHUNDER NARAIN v. FARQUHARSON [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 837

18. ——— Plying boat for hire near public ferry.—A person plying a boat for hire at a distance of three miles from a public ferry cannot be said, with reference to such ferry, to commit "criminal trespass" within the meaning of that term in section 441 of the Penal Code. MUTHRA v. JAWAHIR . . . I. L. R., 1 All., 527

19. ——— Continuing exercise of right of fishery after prohibition.—An act does not amount to criminal trespass under section 441 of the Penal Code, unless it was committed with an intention of committing some offence, or of intimidating, insulting, or annoying some one. Where a party had been exercising a right of fishery for a considerable time, alleging a prescriptive right, the mere fact of continuing to do so after a notice of prohibition is not criminal trespass. 4. ——— Penal Code, s. 300. —The provocation contemplated by section 300 of the Penal Code should be of a character to deprive the offender of his self-control. In determining whether it was so, it is admissible to take into account the condition of mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation. EMPRESS v. KHOGAYI
[I. L. R., 2 Mad., 122

5. ——— Sudden provocation.—Penal Code, s. 300, excep. 1.—To enable a person to plead the extenuating circumstances provided for in section 300, Penal Code, exception 1, the provocation and its effects must be sudden as well as grave, and the deprivation of the power of self-control must continue in order to benefit a man who kills another under circumstances of grave provocation. QUEEN v. BECHOO SAOUT . . 19 W. R., Cr., 35

6. ——— Grave provocation.—Interval between provocation and attack.—Where a man suddenly cut his wife's throat, it was held that, in order to establish that the act was not done under grave provocation so as to bring the case under exception 1 of section 300 of the Penal Code, it is not sufficient to state that the deceased ceased abusing the prisoner then, but it is necessary to show what interval elapsed between the time when the deceased ceased to speak and the instant when the prisoner attacked her. The offence in this case held to be culpable homicide. QUEEN v. NOKUL NUSHYO

11. ——— Grave provocation.—Husband finding wife in adultery.—Where a prisoner confessed that he did not suspect his wife's fidelity; that he left home on business; that on his return he saw what convinced him of his wife's infidelity; and that, maddened at the sight, he killed both her and her paramour,—Held, that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and that the case was one in which he ought to be treated with lenity. QUEEN v. BOODHOO

12. ——— Grave provocation.—Husband seeing wife seduced to adultery.—The wife of the prisoner had been forcibly taken to the house of the deceased, a native physician, who alleged that her presence was necessary to the due performance of certain incantations. The prisoner, armed with a sword, and watching from the roof of the house, saw his wife being actually violated by the deceased. He jumped down from the roof, and struck deceased with his sword in several places, from the effects of which he died,—Held that the prisoner's conviction for murder could not be sustained. The offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. QUEEN v. RAMTAHAL KAHAR . . . 3 B. L. R., A. Cr., 33

13. ——— Grave provocation.—Husband seeing wife in adultery.—Deliberation.—On a certain evening, M., a common workman, saw N. committing adultery with his (M.'s) wife, and on the following morning, while labouring under the excitement provoked by their misconduct, came upon them eating food together, while his wife had neglected to provide food for M. M. took up a billhook and killed N. on the spot,—Held that, if M. connected the subsequent conduct of N. and his wife with their misconduct of the preceding evening and regarded it as implying an open avowal of their criminal relations, which, under the circumstances, he might have done, the provocation was sufficiently grave and sudden to deprive him of self-control, and to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by sections 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property. QUEEN v. MOKEE . . . . 12 W. R., Cr., 15

15. ——— Search by police for stolen property.—Apprehended violence.—A head constable, making an investigation into a case of house-breaking and theft, searched the tents of certain gipsies for the stolen property, but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search, the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money, which he accepted, but at the same time, not deeming it sufficient, he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give anything more on the ground that they were poor and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates' proceeding to execute such order, all the gipsies in the camp, men, women, and children, turned out, some four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones, and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place where such gipsy was being bound and the head constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies the head constable fired with a gun at such crowd, when it was about five paces from him, and killed one of the gipsies, and, having done so, ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested and withdrawn himself and his subordinates, or had he effected his escape. Held that such head constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies, as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grevious hurt would be their consequence, and such head constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder. The Sessions Judge found that the mother could not have been ignorant of the fact that her child was being over-fed, or of the probable consequences of such over-feeding; such feeding was inconsistent with the terms of section 304(a) which provides for the causing of death by any rash or negligent act, not amounting to murder. 7. ——— Mother's right to custody.—Guardian.—Act IX of 1861.—Marriage of Mahomedan mother with Christian in Mahomedan form.—A child, the offspring of a Christian marriage, was living after her father's death under the protection of her mother. A married man, a Christian, came to live with her mother, and, in order to legalize their intercourse, he and the mother became Mahomedans, and were married in Mahomedan form. About three years after, when the child had attained the age of fourteen, some of her relatives applied for an order, under Act IX of 1861, that the girl be removed from the guardianship of the mother and her second husband and placed under a Christian guardian. The girl deposed that she wished to remain with her mother and to become a Mahomedan. Held, by the High Court in granting the application and appointing a guardian in place of her mother, that a Judge, in the exercise of his jurisdiction under the Act, is justified in having respect to the religion professed by the father of a minor, and in passing such orders with regard to the custody of the person of such minor as he may hold to be in accordance with what would have been the minor's father's wishes had he been alive to express them. Where a mother under colour of a change of religion forms a connection or leads a life which, by persons professing her husband's faith, would be deemed immoral, she thereby ceases to be a proper person to be entrusted with the education of the children of her deceased husband. If the Court finds a case made out for its interference, it will not be deterred from the exercise of its powers because the persons setting it in motion may be actuated by motives other than the interests of the minor. Special leave having been given to appeal to the Privy Council, the order was upheld. SKINNER v. ORDE [10 B. L. R., 125

20. ——— Bhagdari tenures in Broach.—Inheritance.—Special custom.—Priority of nearest male relative to daughter or sister.—The plaintiff, as heir of her father (a deceased Hindu bhagdar), sued the sons of sisters of her father's paternal uncle for possession of certain bhagdari lands situate in a village in the Broach collectorate. The defendants pleaded that they were entitled to the property under a special custom regulating the succession to bhagdari lands in the collectorate of Broach, under which custom, on the death of a bhagdar, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, without male issue, his nearest male relations (after the death of his widow), whether sprung through male or female relatives of the deceased bhagdar, succeed to his bhagdari lands to the exclusion of his daughter or sister. Held that the custom alleged was sufficiently proved, and that the defendants were entitled to retain possession of the bhagdar lands in question. Per curiam.—The custom alleged being, if not universal, at least general, in the Broach collectorate, it should, in the case of any particular village, at any rate on evidence being given of its continuance in other similar adjacent villages, if not in the particular village itself (though it would always be more satisfactory if this could be done)—be held still to survive, unless and until the opposite party proved the adoption of some other custom, or of the ordinary rules of inheritance, in the particular village, or, failing such proof, the general prevalence of such rules or such opposing custom in other similar adjacent villages. Quære,—Whether males sprung of male relatives of a deceased bhagdar have priority over males sprung of female relatives of the same. Quære,—Whether a daughter or sister of a deceased bhagdar is wholly excluded, by the custom, from the line of inheritance, or would, on failure of male relations, succeed to the bhagdari lands. The lower Courts having decreed the suit on vague and general parol evidence as to the existence of the said customs,—Held (a) that, where a custom regarding several cesses is alleged, the existence of the custom regarding each cess should be tried as a separate issue; (b) that parol evidence as to the existence of such customs should be tested by ascertaining the grounds of the witness' opinion; (c) that the best proof of custom is instances in which it has been acted on and documentary evidence that it has been enforced; (d) that a custom to be good must be definite. 29. ——— Suit by landholder for declaration of right to take land from occupancy-tenant for cultivation of indigo.—Wajib-ul-urz, Construction of.—The zemindars of a village sued an occupancy-tenant for a declaration of their right to maintain a custom which was thus recorded in the wajib-ul-urz:—"When necessary, one or two bighas out of the tenants' lands are taken with their consent (ba khushi) for sowing indigo." Upon the basis of this entry, they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy-holding at a certain period of the year, for the purpose of cultivating indigo. Held, by the Full Bench, that the word "khushi" used in the wajib-ul-urz indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy-tenant's consent, and the document created no right of the nature alleged, namely, to take the land despite the tenant. 30. ——— Pre-emption.—Wajib-ul-urz.—Evidence of contract and custom.—Act XIX of 1873, s. 91.—Beng. Reg. VII of 1822, s. 9, cl. (i).—The wajib-ul-urz of a village is a document of a public character, prepared with all publicity, and must be considered as primâ facie evidence of the existence of any custom which it records. Its record of the existence of a custom of pre-emption is sufficiently strong evidence to cast on those denying the custom the burden of proof; and in the same manner, when it records a contract of pre-emption between the shareholders, there is a presumption that it is binding on the shareholders. Looking to the public character of the document, and the way it is prepared, and that all shareholders, whether signing it or not, must be presumed to have assented to its terms, the inferences to be deduced from it cannot be disregarded except when they are rebutted by evidence of an opposite character. A suit to enforce the right of pre-emption, which was based on contract and custom as evidenced by the wajib-ul-urz of a village, was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that any contract which might be founded on the wajib-ul-urz was not binding on the vendor-defendant, as that document did not bear his signature, and the lower Appellate Court attached no weight to the wajib-ul-urz as proof of the custom of pre-emption, because it was drawn up when Regulation VII of 1822 was in force, and at that time there was no legal presumption of its accuracy. The claim was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff's evidence did not prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption in the village. Held that the lower appellate Court had erred in dealing with the evidence, and that although this particular wajib-ul-urz was made before Act XIX of 1873 came into force, yet the weight which would attach to its entries, both as proof of the contract as well of custom, was very strong. Isri Singh v. *Ganga, I. Custom.—Evidence of custom—continued.

31. ———— Wajib-ul-urz.—Mahomedan law.—It having been alleged that an estate, by custom, descended to a single heir in the male line, the High Court, concurring with the Court of first instance, found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding, it was argued, among other objections, that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajib-ul-urz of a zamindari village, the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute; the last owner of that estate who held all the shares in the village having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir, the others of the family being maintained. Held that, though termed an entry in a wajib-ul-urz, the document was not entitled to the name, but was rather in the nature of a testamentary attempt to make a disposition contrary to the Mahomedan law of descent. 16. ——— Damage by wrongful act.—Malice.—Injury to legal right.—In the case of damage occasioned by a wrongful act,—i.e., an act which the law esteems an injury,—the same remedy by action lies against the doer, whether the act was his own, spontaneous and unauthorised, or whether it was done by the order of Government. Malice is not a necessary ingredient to the maintenance of the action. It is essential to an action in tort that the act complained of should, under the circumstances, be legally wrongful as regards the party complaining,—that is, it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right: merely that it will, however directly, do him harm in his interests, is not enough. His liability must depend upon the circumstances of the case, i.e., upon the fact whether the wrongful seizure or the injury is the result of his own conduct; for instance, if the judgment-creditor personally, or his authorised agent (ex. gr., his pleader), apply, under section 214 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the attachment of property which is specially designated in that application, and if the Court grant its warrant for the seizure of that particular property, and the officer of the Court execute the warrant, and the property be not that of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would certainly be liable for that wrongful seizure, and the officer of the Court could justify under the warrant, and would not be liable so long as he kept within the duty expressly prescribed for him by it. But if the application of the judgment-creditor were for a general attachment under section 218 of the Code, and the Court took no such security from him as it might take under that section, and if the Court granted a general warrant for the attachment of the moveable property of the judgment-debtor, and the officer of the Court, without any suggestion to that effect from the judgment-creditor or his agent, beyond a general direction to execute the warrant, were to seize property not belonging to the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would not be responsible. Quære,—Whether, under such circumstances as those last mentioned, the officer of the Court would be responsible. 70. ——— Attachment made contrary to order.—When a proper application for process has been made and a proper order granted, the officer of Court cannot be considered to be the agent of the person for whose benefit the process of the Court has issued. Nor is such person responsible for the mistake or misconduct of the officer, unless he or his servants have personally interfered and directed the action of the officer. Where, in a suit for damages for wrongful attachment, it appeared that the defendant, in execution of a decree against a boat-owner, had obtained an order for attachment by prohibitory order under section 234 of Act VIII of 1859, of certain boats which had been hired by the plaintiff to take a cargo to Calcutta, and they were wrongly attached under section 233 by actual seizure and detention, during which one of them sank and was lost,—Held that, unless it could be shown that the defendant or his servants personally interfered and caused the officer of Court to attach the boats by actual seizure, he was not liable for damages. The principle ordinarily applicable to actions of tort is that the plaintiff is never precluded from recovering ordinary damages by reason of his failing to prove the special damage he has laid, unless the special damage is the gist of the action. Le Breton v. *Ennis, 4 Moore's P. Notice was given on the 9th of April, but the defendants were unable to give delivery within the agreed time, and the plaintiffs, on the 11th May, instructed their attorneys to demand immediate payment of the difference between the contract price and the then market price, treating the contract as rescinded. Subsequently the defendants being prepared to give delivery of 350 bags, the plaintiffs agreed to take delivery without "prejudice to their right of claim against the sellers on account of the remaining 175 tons still undelivered." This and several other parcels, making altogether 113 out of the 200 tons, were delivered during the latter part of May; but on the 31st of May plaintiffs refused to take further deliveries, alleging that the quality of the wheat offered was inferior, and brought a suit for damages for the non-delivery under the contract of the remaining 87 tons. Held that there was no binding agreement on the part of the plaintiffs to give time for the fulfilment of the contract after April, but merely a forbearance on their part to pursue their rights, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the full measure of damages. Ogle v. *Vane, L. On failure by the defendant to take delivery, the plaintiffs brought a suit for breach of the contract, estimating the damages at the difference between the contract price and the market prices on the days when the defendant ought to have taken delivery. It was proved that the plaintiffs never had the goods in their possession, but that they could have obtained them under a contract they had with a third person, and it was found that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver them at the time contracted for. The lower Court held that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price of the bags and the amount which it cost the plaintiffs under their collateral contract to procure and deliver them. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the proper measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and the market prices at the dates of failure by the defendant to take delivery. Owing partly to such indorsements, and partly to the negligence of the Treasury Officer, such subordinate was enabled to misappropriate and negotiate two of such notes, aggregating R12,000 in value. The remaining seven of such notes were despatched to Calcutta, and a consolidated note for R31,200 was returned and delivered to the plaintiff, when the misappropriation of the two notes was discovered. The plaintiff sued Government, claiming "that it might be directed to make restitution of the two notes or deliver two other notes of equal value or their value in cash" with interest. Charterers to have the option of cancelling the charter-party, if the steamer has not arrived in Calcutta on the 15th April 1871." The defendants signed the charter-party as "agent of steamer Atholl." The steamer was not, at the time the charter-party was entered into, on her way to Calcutta, being then in the port of London, and she did not start for some days after the date of the charter-party. She touched at Madras and Colombo on her way, and did not arrive in Calcutta until 11th April. Rates of freight having declined since the middle of March, at which time, it was alleged, the steamer ought to have arrived, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages. Held, the defendants were liable. The measure of damages was the difference between the value the steamer would have been to the plaintiffs as an instrument for earning freight at market prices, if she had been put at their disposal at the time when she ought to have been under the contract, i.e., a fortnight or three weeks earlier, and what she was worth to them in the same view at the time when she actually was delivered. In a suit for a refund of the deposit money and for damages,—Held that the suit was brought not on the potta and kabuliat, but on an implied contract by the defendant to do that which was necessary to give effect to his own potta, viz., to allow it to be registered, and that the real question was whether the plaintiffs had done all that they were required to do to entitle them to the assent of the defendant to registration. As the potta had been executed and handed over, if it specified no pre-requisite conditions, the natural presumption was that no such conditions existed; although that presumption might be rebutted by sufficient evidence. Damages for a breach of a contract of this kind, though not necessarily the same as for keeping a person out of possession, would yet be the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the contract not having been performed. Held, further, that although the amount the refund of which was sued for was in fact in deposit for the rents of the old lease which had not yet expired, yet as the defendant had abandoned that lease and entered into a new arrangement as regarded the deposit, he could not now fall back on the old contract once abandoned, nor could he retain the money under the new contract which he had wrongfully refused to carry out. 113. ——— Liquidated damages.—Penalty.—Measure of damages.—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 74.—Under section 74 of the Contract Act, 1872, the Courts are not bound, even in cases where the parties to a contract have, in anticipation of a breach, expressly determined by agreement what shall be the sum payable as damages for the breach, to award such sum for a breach, but may award for the same "reasonable compensation" not exceeding such sum. As a general principle, compensation must be commensurate with the injury sustained. Acting upon this principle, when the injury consists of a breach of contract, the Court would assess damages with a view of restoring to the injured party such advantages as he might reasonably be expected to have derived from the contract had the breach not occurred. Held, therefore, where the parties to a contract to deliver a certain quantity of raw indigo on a certain day agreed that a certain sum should be paid as compensation in case such indigo was not delivered as agreed, that the method of assessing damages in case of a breach of the contract would be to ascertain the quantity of indigo which could have been pressed out of the stipulated amount of indigo plant, to ascertain the price at which the indigo might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, and to deduct from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of indigo in question; and that more than the amount so ascertained ought not equitably to be awarded, such amount being "reasonable compensation" for

Defendants unroofed their house, raised the wall, and placed beams on it to rebuild their house. The lower Appellate Court found that, in consequence of this alteration, the rain from defendants' house descended upon plaintiff's verandah and caused damage to plaintiff, and decreed that defendants should restore the wall to its former height, and remove the beams placed on it. Held, on special appeal, that taking the finding to be that the alteration created "stillicidium," where it did not exist before, or that it rendered more burdensome an existent "servitus stillicidii," it would be very dangerous to hold that every trifling excess in the exercise of a servitude should justify the pulling down of the building creating the excess; that in the present case the damages should be assessed and awarded, and the injunction to remove the roof of the house and reduce the wall be made conditional upon the defendants not removing the cause of the nuisance. 145. ——— Infringement of trade mark.—Damage caused to plaintiffs by way of enhancement of loss, and not by loss of profit.— Where the infringement of the plaintiffs' trade mark by the defendants caused a loss of profit to the plaintiffs, not by diminishing the amount of goods sold by the plaintiffs, by taking away their customers or ousting them from their usual market, but by causing the goods actually sold by the plaintiffs to be sold at a diminished price,—Held, that the defendants were liable for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs; and that the amount of the reduction in the price of the goods sold was the measure of damages. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the infringement of a trade mark used by the plaintiffs upon bundles of yarn sold by them, and known as "No. 20 red tie" yarn. They alleged that the defendants introduced into the Madras market a quantity of yarn bearing similar marks to those upon the plaintiffs' yarn, but of very inferior quality; and that, in consequence of this action of the defendants, the selling price of the plaintiff's yarn was, during the months of April and May 1885, depreciated beyond the amount of depreciation attributable to the natural fall of market prices in those months; and they contended that such depreciation was the natural and reasonable result of the defendants' wrongful act. The plaintiffs calculated the damages sustained by them at R6,000. It appeared that, during the months in question, the plaintiffs' mill was not working at a profit, and would have made no profits even if the plaintiffs had obtained for their yarn the ruling market price. The damage, therefore (if any), caused to the plaintiffs by the action of the defendants, was not in form of profits, but in the form of enhancement of loss. Held, upon the evidence, that the extra fall in the price of the plaintiffs' yarn beyond the general market depression was due, not simply to the introduction of the defendants' yarn into the Madras market, but to its introduction with the trade mark similar to that of the plaintiffs. The Court found that the said wrongful act of the defendants prejudicially affected the sale of the plaintiffs' yarn to the extent of about two annas per bundle; that the damage thus sustained by the plaintiffs was the reasonable and probable result of the defendants' action; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover such damage from the defendants. The attachment had been made under a warrant which specified the rice in question, and which had been issued upon a darkhast presented by the defendants, in which they prayed for the attachment of this particular rice as their judgment-debtor's property. The rice, while in the custody of a bailiff of the Court nazir in the place where it had been attached, was clandestinely threshed and carried off by thieves, who left the straw. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants,—Held, the measure of damages should be the value of the rice as it stood at the time of the wrongful attachment made at the instance of the defendants. 149. ———— Loss of timber on attached estate.—This suit was brought to cancel a decision of the Magistracy (A.), dated 11th December 1869, whereby first defendant was put in possession of the Choladi forest, to establish plaintiff's jeum right thereon, and to recover the same with R14,000, value of timber. The facts as they appeared, were that there was a coffee estate called Choladi, carved out of the same jungle as that in which the Choladi forest was, but not adjoining it and in a different talook. The cultivation of that estate was begun in 1862 by G. who in 1865 transferred his interest to B., who in 1867 was succeeded by first defendant. In the following year the first defendant proceeded to lay claim to the land in dispute, and in 1868 he prosecuted some hill-men for trespass and had their crops attached. In June 1869 he procured an order from the Deputy Magistrate whereby the Gudalur Sub-Magistrate was ordered to attach certain lands (no boundaries being specified). The land and timber thereon were accordingly attached and an order of attachment served on plaintiff. The case then came before the Assistant Magistrate, who, after holding an enquiry as to possession, passed the order (A.), cancellation whereof was prayed in the plaint. The District Judge found that down to the interference of the Magistrate in 1868, plaintiff was in possession as owner, and he further decreed that defendant should pay plaintiff R14,000 on account of the timber which had been carried off, by whom it did not appear. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the decision of the District Judge on the question of title, but reversed it as to the value of the timber carried off, because there was no causal connection between its loss and a wrongful act of the defendant which was needed to justify the award of that sum as damages. There was no evidence of the mode of the loss. The occasion for it was given by an order of a Magistrate, and the mere preferring of the complaint which gave birth to that order did not render the defendant responsible in the circumstances of the case. The possession of the estate had been in the first instance given in right of the defendant's claim as mortgagee, and afterwards retained mistakenly in the same right. The Civil Judge awarded the plaintiff R20,000 as compensation for the injury, privation, and suffering resulting to the plaintiff from the defendant's wrongful acts in obtaining and withholding possession of the estate. Held, that the defendant should not have been adjudged to pay more than the value of the profits of the estate, and of any property removed from the estate, and compensation for any injury caused to the estate by the acts or neglect of the defendant or his agents. The plaint stated that the defendants were punished criminally for the trespass by the Magistrate, who, after enquiry under sections 318 and 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code, restored the possession of the pagoda to the plaintiffs. The damages claimed were the value of jewels, cash, records, and accounts not restored; the expense incurred by the durmakurtah in the purification of the pagoda; the amount of counsel's and vakeel's fees in the criminal proceedings; and the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda. Held that the plaint was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs by the durmakurtah through his recognised agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequences; that the amount of income received by the defendants during the festival was a loss sustained by the durmakurtah and not by the plaintiff personally; and that the plaintiff had failed to make out the loss of property alleged. injurious to them. Held, that such damage was much too remote to entitle them to relief. Held, also, that the damage done to the plaintiffs by passengers and carriers trespassing on their lands on their way to the ferry was too remote to entitle them to maintain the suit. 157. ——— Charter-party.—Unseaworthiness of ship.—Expense of renewing bills.—Delay.—Loss by exchange.—The plaintiffs chartered a ship of the defendant, and by the charter-party it was stipulated that the said ship, being tight, staunch, and strong, should receive from the plaintiffs a full cargo of rice or grain, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to St. Denis, the freight to be paid there on right delivery of cargo. The penalty for non-performance of the charter-party was to be the estimated amount of freight. The plaintiffs began to load on May 3rd, and continued doing so until June 10th, having then shipped very nearly the full cargo; they then stopped loading in consequence of a notice from the defendant that the ship was leaking. In consequence of the leakage the cargo had to be shifted, and a portion of it found to be damaged had to be replaced after the leak was stopped. The charges of shifting the cargo and the cost of the cargo substituted were paid by the defendant. Considerable delay occurred in consequence of the leak, and the loading was not completed until the end of July. On May 28th, when the plaintiffs had loaded a portion of the cargo, and had obtained bills of lading, they drew a bill of exchange at sixty days for the value of the cargo covered by the bills of lading on their agent at St. Denis, which they sold to the Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, hypothecating the cargo for the amount of their draft. Other similar drafts were subsequently drawn and sold. When the plaintiffs received notice of the leakage, they, in anticipation of the delay which would occur in consequence, arranged with the Comptoir d'Escompte that the bills should not be forwarded forthwith, but should be held by the Comptoir d'Escompte, and renewed by the plaintiffs on the completion of the loading, the plaintiffs paying interest on the bills in the meantime at 9 per cent. per annum. On renewing the bills, the plaintiffs, in consequence of the difference in the rate of exchange, were out of pocket R400. In an action against the owner for breach of the charter-party in not supplying a ship tight, staunch, and strong, as stipulated, the plaintiffs sought to recover, as damages arising out of such breach of the charter-party, the interest paid by them on the drafts in pursuance of their arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte, the sum they had to pay on renewing the bills, a further sum for interest on bills they could not negotiate in consequence of not being able to obtain bills of lading from the defendant, and the value of the stamps on the bills, which had been cancelled in pursuance of the plaintiffs' arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte. Held that such damages were too remote. The Principal Sudder Ameen considered that the agreement was invalid, on the ground that it appeared to have been executed with a view to defraud creditors of S. Held on appeal, that the real nature of the transaction was that S. borrowed money from defendants to enable him to buy in his own land; that defendants purchased only for and on behalf of S., taking from him an assignment of part of the property for twenty years, in order to repay themselves the money lent; that there was therefore abundant consideration for the defendants' promise to give up possession at the end of twenty years. Held also, following the English law, that where there is a real transaction between the parties for valuable consideration, whether it be by way of sale or mortgage, the transaction is valid even as against a creditor, though the object may have been to defeat an expected execution. An assignment prior to attachment that is good against the judgment-debtor is also, as a general rule, good against his attaching creditor. Notice to the holder of funds is not necessary to complete, as against the assignor, an equitable assignment of such funds. In August 1870, R. J. signed and gave to

This letter was given to F. S. & Co. in consideration of a pre-existing debt. On the 8th of August 1870, F. S. & Co. sent the letter to E. L. & Co. with a request that they should act upon it. 20. ——— Assignment made with intention of defeating creditors.—D. executed a razinama in favour of plaintiff on the 20th August 1868, transferring certain lands to the latter. Plaintiff, after passing the usual kabuliat to the Collector, was put in possession of the lands in question. On the 7th April 1869, T. obtained a money decree against D., and on the 3rd July 1869 attached the lands as belonging to D. Held that, if the razinama were a real transaction made for a valuable consideration, although entered into with the intention of defeating the execution of the money decree, the title of plaintiff under that razinama would prevail. A sale or mortgage, if real, though made for the purpose of defeating an intended or probable execution, is valid against the execution-creditor. But if it be only a colourable transaction, not intended to confer upon the vendee or mortgagee any beneficial interest in the property, but simply to substitute such vendee or mortgagee as a nominal owner in lieu of the real owner (the judgment-debtor), with the object of saving the property from execution, the vendee or mortgagee is a mere trustee and the judgment-creditor is entitled to attach and sell the property. 21. ——— Fraudulent transfer.—Burden of proof.—Mahomedan law.—Sale of immoveable property by Mahomedan in satisfaction of wife's dower.—Consideration.—Deferred debt.—A genuine sale made for good and valid consideration to one creditor, even if effected to delay and defeat another, apart from cases in which either insolvency or bankruptcy is involved, is not void. If a man owes another a real debt, and in satisfaction thereof sells to his creditor an equivalent portion of his property, transferring it to the vendee, and thereby extinguishing the debt, the transaction cannot be assailed, though the effect of it is to give the selected creditor a preference. Wood v. Dixie, 7 Q. B., 892, Chowne v. Baylis, 31 L. J. Ch., 757, and the authorities collected in the notes to Twyne's case, 1 Smith's L. C., 12, referred to. Pending a suit for recovery of a debt, the defendant, who was a Mahomedan, executed a deed of sale dated in June 1882, of a four-annas zamindari share in favour of his wife, the consideration recited therein being the amount of the vendee's deferred dower-debt. Subsequently the creditor obtained a simple money decree against the defendant, and in execution thereof attached the four-annas share. The vendee objected to the attachment, on the basis of her sale-deed, but her objection was disallowed on the ground that the instrument was collusive. She thereupon brought a suit against the judgment-creditor for a declaration of her right, and to set aside the attachment order. Held that, if there was in fact a subsisting debt due for dower from the husband to the wife, and he transferred and she accepted the four-annas share in satisfaction of it, the transaction was a perfectly legitimate one, and no Court had any power to disturb it. It was for the defendant, the judgment-creditor, to establish either that the deferred dower-debt did not constitute such a present consideration as would support the sale, or that the transaction was merely colourable and a fictitious one, which was never intended to have operation or effect, either as a transfer of the property or an extinguishment of the dower-debt; and that, despite what appeared in the sale-deed, the parties remained in precisely the same position as before it was executed—the four-annas still remaining the property of the vendor, and as such liable to the attachment. Held, applying the general principles of the Mahomedan law as to deferred debts, that there was good consideration for the sale of June 1882, and that, in the absence of proof of fraud of the kind above indicated, the vendee was entitled to maintain it, and to succeed in the suit. The deeds contained powers directing the trustees, after dividing the trust-monies rateably among the assenting creditors, to pay "the residue, if any, after answering the several purposes aforesaid and also the debts or dividends upon the debts of all such creditors as shall decline to come in and execute or assent" to the said P.; powers authorising them to return to the debtor or permit him to retain such part of his household furniture, linen, and china as they might think fit; and powers authorising them to carry on the debtor's business and employ him therein and in winding up his affairs,—Held, in the Lower Court (TURNER, J.), that an insolvent-debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who may assent to the conditions of the assignment; and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment-creditor. Such an assignment may be made to trustees, but it is not requisite that it should be made to trustees; and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor, who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment. It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor, nor is it invalid if it declares a resulting trust in favour of the debtor; but semble,—that the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to assent to the assignment. Nor is it invalid if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, &c., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised only when the other assets are insufficient to discharge the primary objects of the trust. Nor is it invalid if it contain a power for the trustees to continue the business, if the power so given is ancillary to winding-up the business and realising the assets of the estate; nor is it invalid if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of trustees. The question as to the intention of the debtor, in executing such an assignment, is a question of fact rather than of law; and in determinnig this question the conditions and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered. Held on appeal (per ROBERTS and PEARSON, JJ., MORGAN, C. J., dissenting) that the deeds were good deeds. A trader in the mofussil in failing circumstances may, in the absence of any statutory provision and of a bankrupt law, make a valid assignment of his property, before liens have attached upon it, or afterwards subject to such liens, to trustees simply for the purpose of having it distributed fairly among all his creditors, although it may defeat particular decree-holders and deprive them of their execution. Semble,—Such a trust does not become inoperative by reason of the retirement of two out of three trustees and of the inability of the third to charge his duties properly. After K.'s death the plaintiff sued for an account and for redemption of some of K.'s land which had been originally mortgaged by K. to the defendant. It was contended in defence that the deed created a trust for the payment of K.'s debts, and that the defendant was entitled to tack on to the mortgage debt a simple contract debt which K. owed to him. It was found that the defendant was the only unpaid creditor, and that the property was more than sufficient to pay the debt. Held that the deed did not create a trust for K.'s creditors,—the object, on the contrary, being the preservation of the family property.—Held further, that due effect could not be given to the whole of the instrument, unless construed as a conveyance to the plaintiff, charged as between himself and K. with the payment of K.'s debts. Held also, that during K.'s life his creditors could not claim to be paid under this instrument, in the absence of any communication between them and the plaintiff, capable of being construed as an admission by him that he held the property as trustee for them, although they might possibly impeach it. son into Court merely for the purpose of getting the Court to clear up difficulties, whether of fact or law, which may have arisen between himself and the defendant. He must generally allege and rely upon some cause of action against the defendant, except in that class of cases in which the Court gives its aids towards the fulfilment of trusts, and this principle is not affected by section 15 of Act VIII of 1859. Therefore, where a plaintiff bought, at a sale in execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest of one defendant, a judgment-debtor, in a ship, and by his plaint sought to discover the bond fides of certain transactions by way of mortgage between the judgment-debtor and the other defendants, and asked a declaration that he, as purchaser, was entitled to the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor; or in case it should appear that, at the time of the attachment in execution, the ship was the property of the judgment-debtor, subject to any valid lien or charge in the hands of the other defendants or either of them affecting the same, then that the amount of such lien or charge might be ascertained, and the plaintiff as such purchaser might be declared entitled to redeem the same. Held that the plaint was bad upon the face of it. But as it appeared, taking the plaint and evidence together, that there was some substantial dispute between the parties relative to the defendant's mortgage, the Court, to prevent further litigation, construed the plaint as having asked that the alleged mortgage might be set aside. ments. Immediately after, A. executed a pottah in favour of B., covering a portion of the same estate, whereby B.'s rent was to remain unchanged for a period conterminous with the plaintiff's lease. In a suit by the plaintiff against B. and A.'s representative to have the pottah set aside, it was objected that, inasmuch as the deed had not been as yet set up against the plaintiff, nor any injury shown to have been occasioned to him thereby, he had no cause of action: Held that the suit was maintainable. In laying down the rule that "a declaratory decree cannot be made, unless there be a right to consequential relief," the Privy Council did not intend to deny to the Courts of this country the power to grant decrees in any case in which, independently of the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, section 15, they had the power to grant a decree. This power is generally the same as that of the Court of Chancery in England. RAM NEEDHEE KOONDOO v. RUGHOO NATH NARAIN MULLO

The executant brought a civil suit against the party in favour of whom the document had been drawn, for a declaration that the document was not genuine, and was invalid and inoperative.—Held that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try the genuineness of a registered document: that the registration of a document, the execution of which was obtained by improper means, affecting the property of the executant, is a good cause of action on which to ask for a declaratory decree. 36. ——— Suit against tenant for life alleging waste.—Consequential relief.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.—The words of section 15, Act VIII of 1859, must be construed upon the principles and by the light of the decisions of the English Courts of Equity upon the 60th section of 15 and 16 Victoria, cap. 86, which is in similar terms. The effect of these decisions, taken in conjunction with the decisions of the Privy Council, in construing the provisions of the Indian Act, is, that a declaratory decree is not to be made unless there is a right on the part of the plaintiff to consequential relief, which, although not asked for, might, if asked for, have been given, or unless the declaration of right may be made the foundation of relief to be had in another Court. The plaintiff, purporting to be the next heir, brought a suit against the life-tenant of a zemindari, and made another claimant to the succession to the zemindari a defendant in the suit. The plaint prayed for a decree declaratory of the plaintiff's right to succeed on the death of the zemindar and made allegations of waste in respect of which he asked relief. Held that even if the plaintiff had proved the alleged acts of waste, which he had not done, there was not a right to consequential relief which would entitle him to a declaratory decree. wished the property to go after her death to her nephew, and that S., the person entitled to succeed her, had no right to the property. Held that such statement, as it was intended to operate, and would have operated, as a will in respect of the property, gave S. a right to sue for a declaration that it should not have any effect as against him. 56. ——— Suit by reversioner to set aside deed.—A Hindu died, leaving a widow, two daughters R. and P., and a grandson B. by his daughter R. The widow took possession of the estate and executed an ikrarnama, wherein, after reciting that she was in possession "without the coparcenary of any one," she declared that "B., the grandson of me, the declarant, is the heir of my late husband and of me the declarant," and that all the property was "the right of B. as aforesaid," and continued:—"During the life of me, the declarant, I am in possession without the co-shareship of any one, and will continue to be so; after my death B. will get possession of the whole of the moveable and immoveable properties appertaining to the estate of my late husband. No one else has the right or demand to the same; therefore, these words have been written and given as an ikrarnama that it may be of use when occasion arises." Under the ikrarnama proceedings were completed for mutation of names in favour of B. Subsequently to the execution of the ikrarnama P. gave birth to the plaintiff, and shortly afterwards died. The plaintiff, on attaining his majority, and during the life of the widow and R., brought a suit against B. to have the ikrarnama set aside and declared void as against him, and for a declaration of his right to a moiety of the estate of his grandfather on the death of the widow. Held that he had no cause of action. 57. ——— Discretion of Court to grant declaratory decree.—A suit by a reversioner to set aside a zur-i-peshgi lease executed more than nine years previously having failed, by reason of the inability of the plaintiff to establish the claim set up in it, the High Court was asked to continue it by remanding it to the lower Court in order that a declaratory decree might finally be passed. Held that it was not a case in which it would be right for the Court to exercise its discretion. 58. ——— Mortgage by Hindu widow in possession of property in lieu of maintenance.—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Hindu widow.—The name of the widow of a member of a joint Hindu family was allowed by the other members to be recorded in her husband's place in respect of his rights and interests in the family property by way of compliment to her, and they consented that, in lieu of maintenance, she should receive the profits of the property during her lifetime. The widow executed a deed of mortgage of the property, which did not specifically state the amount of the estate mortgaged, and also a bond, upon which the obligee obtained a decree, in execution whereof he attached part of the property recorded in the name of the obligor. The members of the family brought a suit in which they prayed for a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow was invalid, and that the property was not liable for the amount due thereunder, or to attachment in execution of the decree obtained upon the bond. Held that if the widow's possession were only a possession by the plaintiffs' consent entitling her merely to receive the profits for her maintenance, the plaintiffs might eject her from the property, and that before they could obtain a declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, they must seek their relief by ejectment, that being the substantial and real relief appropriate to the cause of action. On the other hand, if the widow had an estate in possession, given to her in exchange for her maintenance, she had an interest which she was competent to alienate. Held also that, inasmuch as the deed of mortgage contained no description of the amount of the estate mortgaged by the widow, and upon its face, mortgaged her share of the property only, it could have no operation beyond her share, and the Court would not be justified in granting a declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, merely because the plaintiffs apprehended some possible future claim based upon the allegation that the transfer comprised the entire estate. 59. ——— Suit by reversioner for possession.—Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s. 42.—Civil Procedure Code, s. 578.—A suit brought against K., the widow of R., a Hindu, by the representatives of R.'s brothers, H. and P., for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognized the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K.'s death, M., a daughter of R., brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S., M.'s son, who had been born after K.'s compromise, brought a suit against M. and the representatives of H. and P. to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that the family, being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K. and the withdrawal of the former suit by M. were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and, upon these findings, gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M.'s death.

The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K. was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Held that the prayer in the plaint was wide enough to include a prayer for declaratory relief such as the first Court had given. Also that it could not be said that a daughter's son was not, under any condition, competent to maintain a declaratory suit of this nature during the lifetime of his mother or maternal aunt, in respect of his maternal grandfather's property, to the full ownership of which he had a reversionary right. Also that the awarding of declaratory relief, as regulated by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is a discretionary power which Courts of Equity are empowered to exercise with reference to the circumstances of each case and the nature of the facts stated in the plaint, and the prayer of the plaintiff; that so long as a Court of first instance possesses jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory suit, and, entering into the merits of the case, arrives at right conclusions and awards a declaratory decree, such a decree cannot be reversed in appeal simply because the discretion has been improperly exercised; and that such improper exercise of discretion under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act has no higher footing than that of an error, defect or irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, within the meaning of section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. This does not imply that, even in cases where the discretionary power to award declaratory relief has been exercised wholly arbitrarily, and in a manner grossly inconsistent with judicial principles, the Court of appeal would have no power to interfere. Ram Kanaye Chuckerbutty v. *Prosunno Coomar Sein, 13 W. 60. ——— Decree against widow.—Fraud.—Reversioner.—Upon the death of R., a Hindu, who was separate from his brother S., his widow G. became life-tenant of his estate, and his daughter B. became entitled to succeed after G.'s death. In 1882, a suit was brought by S. and G. against V. to recover the value of a branch of a mangoe tree wrongfully taken by the defendant, and for maintenance of possession over the grove in which the tree was situate. The suit was dismissed, and it was decided that R. was not the owner of the grove, nor was G. the owner. In 1885, B. brought a suit against G., S., V., and A., to whom V. had sold some of the trees, claiming a declaration of her right and possession of the grove, upon the allegation that the proceedings of 1882 were carried on in collusion between S. and G. on the one hand and V. on the ther, for the purpose of improperly preventing her from asserting her rights. Held also that, if it should turn out that there was fraud and collusion in the proceedings of 1882, and an attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's right as reversioner to the grove on the death of her mother, she would be entitled in the present suit to claim not only a declaration of her right, but also to have the grove reduced into the possession of the life-tenant; and that such relief could be given upon this form of plaint. *Katama Natchiar's Case, 9 Moore's I. 61. ——— Intention to interfere with rights.—To entitle a plaintiff to a declaratory decree, he must show some cause of suit, something more than a wish to interfere with his rights. 62. ——— Obligation to show title.—Discretion of Court.—In a suit for a declaration of right, a plaintiff ought on the face of his plaint to show not merely that he has a title, but that circumstances exist which necessitate his application to the Court for a declaratory decree. It is discretionary with the Court to make a declaratory decree. KHADIM ALI v. NAZIR BEGUM . . 3 N. W., 262

63. ——— Hostile Act.—Invasion of right.—In order to entitle a plaintiff to a bare declaration of right under section 15, Act VIII of 1859, he must make out, to the satisfaction of the Court, some act done by the defendant which is hostile to and invades that right, and which would justify an injunction or a decree for damages, or a decree for delivery of possession being passed against the defendant, if the Court had so thought fit to exercise its discretion. 66. ——— Prospective injury.—Suit to declare user.—In a suit to establish plaintiff's right to the reasonable use, for the purpose of irrigation, of water, the flow of which had been impeded by a bund erected by defendants,—Held that even though plaintiffs had not yet been endamaged by the acts of the defendants, it was in the discretion of the Court, if they proved their right, to give them a declaratory decree recognising that right, seeing that serious consequences might otherwise result. WUZEEROODDEEN v. SHEO BUND LALL [11 W. R., 285

68. ——— Cause of action.—A suit was brought against the plaintiff by his tenants, for an illegal distress in attaching crops raised by them on the land let to them by him. The present defendant, in the course of that suit, presented a petition to the Court, in which he stated that he was the owner of the land on which the crops attached had been raised. The plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration of his title and confirmation of possession, alleging that the defendants' statement affected his (plaintiff's) title by throwing a cloud over it. Held there was no cause of action. Per PAUL, J.—A suit merely in anticipation of a threatened ejectment will not lie. There must be something in the case either in the nature of an invasion of some right, or in the shape of an impediment or obstacle in the way of full enjoyment of proprietary right, to found a claim to a declaratory relief; but a mere allegation, or a mere threat without action taken or founded upon it, will not be sufficient to entitle a party to a declaration of his title. 69. ——— Allegation injurious to plaintiff.—Consequential relief.—The words of section 15, Act VIII of 1859, are to be interpreted as giving a right to obtain a declaration of title only in those cases in which the Court could have granted relief if relief had been prayed for. A suit by a party in possession for a declaration of title and to set aside, not any deed nor any act of the defendant, but a mere allegation on his part that he holds under a certain tenure, is not maintainable. 76. ——— Denial of title without injurious act.—Annoyance.—In suits for a declaration of title to a divided share of ancestral property, the ground alleged in each case for seeking the declaration was that the representatives of the brothers of the plaintiff's father had refused to be parties to the registering of the property in plaintiff's name, and had executed a deed of sale of it to a third party (third defendant), and registered him as the purchaser. The Court of first instance in each case decreed for the plaintiff. The Appellate Court, following Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai, 2 Mad., 333, dismissed the suits, on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in a position to maintain them. On special appeal,—Held that the suits should be remanded for a declaration of the plaintiff's title, if established. To maintain a suit for a declaration of title, some adverse act, intended and calculated to be prejudicial to the title which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of, must appear to have been done by the defendant. The mere denial of the title, or doing an act which causes annoyance, cannot imperil the plaintiff's title, nor have any serious effect on the quiet enjoyment of his proprietary right, and is not sufficient to support such a suit. The principle upon which the decision in Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai proceeds, is inapplicable to suits under section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. KARYAN v. PERIA SIDDEN. 77. ——— Failure of previous suit for possession of land.—Res judicata, Plea of.—Suit brought by plaintiff against the first three defendants as his tenants on kanam, and the fourth, the representative of a rival jenmi, to obtain a declaration of title as jenmi. Plaintiff had previously sued the first three defendants to establish the relation of jenmi and kanamkar, and to recover the land. He failed, and then brought the present suit. Held that this was a case of the employment of the device of a suit for a declaration of title in order to get back land by a crooked and not legal process, after failure to recover by proper legal means, the intention being to cut off the defendants (the tenants) from the plea of res judicata. The Court, which had a discretion as to whether such a suit should be permitted, ought at once to have said that it should not. A suit for foreclosure was then brought by the three mortgagees who obtained a decree in 1856. Prior to the decree one J. S., who had purchased the interest of S., was made a party to the suit, and he sold his interest to the plaintiffs' father in 1861. The defendant having failed in a suit to recover possession of M.'s share on the strength of his wife's auction purchase, obtained an ikrarnamah from M.'s sons relinquishing in his favour the rights they had inherited from their father. He then applied to the Collector, and, in spite of the plaintiff's objection, had his name recorded in the towzi as proprietor in succession to M. To cancel the effect of this proceeding the plaintiff sued for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession,—Held that, as the plaintiff was in possession and had been so from the time of the conveyance by J. S., there was no necessity for his taking out execution of the foreclosure decree, the expiry of which therefore could not deprive him of his title to the declaratory decree now sought, the defendant's conduct in the mutation proceeding being sufficient cause of action. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for the removal of the attachment, but their application was rejected. They then sued for a declaration of their right to two-thirds of the property. The District Judge who tried the suit rejected it on the ground that it was barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), because the plaintiffs might have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title, and omitted to do so. He was of opinion that the attachment constituted a dispossession, and that the plaintiffs might have asked to be replaced in possession, or, at any rate, for the removal of the attachment. Held, by the High Court on appeal, that the plaint was not open to objection on the ground that it only asked for a declaratory decree without any consequential relief. Held that the prohibitory order to D. did not constitute a dispossession of D. and still less of the plaintiffs, and that they could not have properly asked for removal of the attachment by a cancellation of the prohibitory order to D. so long as they admitted that D. had an interest in the attached property. Held also, that the plaintiffs could not have properly asked for any consequential relief in their suit, but that when they instituted it they were entitled, and indeed bound, to ask for a declaration of their right, if only

The Court had no power in this suit to try the validity of the lakhiraj tenure set up by defendant as to some of the land; plaintiff should have proved that it was his mal land, and that the defendant had paid rent for it. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for a declaration of his right to erect the bridge in question, and to have the order of the Magistrate set aside. Held that no such suit would lie. The Judge in the Court below held that the suit would lie to try the plaintiff's right to erect a bridge over the khal. Held, on appeal, the suit ought to have been dismissed. 137. ——— Suit to have status as tenure-holder declared.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.—Consequential relief.—A suit in which the plaintiff prayed for a decree declaring that the defendant was not, as had been fraudulently recorded in the revenue registers, a perpetual lessee, but only tenant-at-will of certain villages, of which the plaintiff was proprietor, held to be maintainable. MAHOMED v. KANIZUK FATIMA . 6 N. W., 231

139. ——— Denial of plaintiff's right as audhikari.—Cause of action.—In a suit for declaration or confirmation of the plaintiff's title to the office of audhikari of the Difloo Sastur, alleged to be situate at Nowgong, where the defendant in his written statement claimed to be the audhikari, and alleged that the headship was situated elsewhere, the defendant was held to be asserting a title adverse to the plaintiff sufficient to justify a declaratory decree. 140. ——— Suit for declaration on low stamp duty to obtain relief for which a higher stamp is chargeable.—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—The defendant was in possession of the estate of a deceased gosavi as his shishya (spiritual son). The plaintiff sued upon a stamp of R10 for a declaration that he was the true shishya of the said gosavi by a previous adoption, his real object being to establish a title to the estate in the hands of the defendant,—Held that, under the circumstances, the Court would not exercise, in the plaintiff's favour, the discretionary power to grant a declaratory decree vested in it by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), inasmuch as to do so would enable the plaintiff to obtain a relief on a stamp of R10 which the Legislature intended should be chargeable with a higher fee, and thus would have the effect of giving countenance to an evasion of the stamp law. 141. ——— Suit to declare illegal proceedings removing person from office.—Want of actual ouster.—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Suit by six plaintiffs praying for a declaration that certain proceedings of a District Temple Committee removing them from office as trustees of a temple were illegal. Defendants pleaded that the suit would not lie because further relief might have been sought,—Held that, unless there had been an actual ouster from office, a declaratory suit would lie. RAMANUJA v. DEVANAYAKA [I. L. R., 8 Mad., 361

142. ——— Right to appoint ghatwal.—Infringement of right of Government.—In a suit by the Government in which the plaint claimed the right "to reinstate a ghatwal in possession of a certain estate as being a ghatwali tenure liable to be appropriated to the use of the ghatwal for the time being, by setting aside a putni talook collusively created by the defendants," it was found that no right of the Government had been infringed by the creation of such patni talook, which the defendant had a right to make, and the Government was held not to be entitled to a bare declaration of right. 144. ——— Suit for declaration of right to flow of water.—Omission to specify damages.—A suit for a declaration of prescriptive right to the use and enjoyment of the water of a watercourse can be maintained without the specification of any particular amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff. The general rule of law in a case of this description is that, although proprietors of an estate through which a watercourse passes have the right to make use of the water for irrigating purposes, they must do so only to such extent as will not interfere with similar rights possessed by parties holding land lower down on the same watercourse. SARDAWAN v. HURBUNS SINGH . 11 W. R., 254

145. ——— Suit for declaration of right to maintenance.—Raising issues not raised by pleadings.—In a suit by a Hindu widow for a declaration of her right to maintenance out of her husband's estate which had been mortgaged to the defendant by the heir, the plaint prayed "that the rights of the plaintiff over the estate of her husband by way of maintenance, and for the expenses attendant on the marriage of her daughters, might be ascertained and declared; that it might be declared that the defendant took the mortgage subject to the plaintiff's right to maintenance and right to such expenses as aforesaid; that for such purpose all proper accounts might be taken; for an injunction; and such further or other relief as might be necessary. No specific sum was asked for maintenance, nor was it stated on what portion of the estate the maintenance was sought to be charged, nor that the defendant took with notice of the plaintiff's assertion of her rights. The lower Court held that the suit ought to be dismissed as praying only for a declaration of right. No alteration in the form of the suit or in the issues in this respect was proposed for the plaintiff. Held on appeal that the Judge ought not to have dismissed the suit, but to have framed issues for the purpose of determining what should be allowed for the maintenance of the plaintiff and the expenses of the marriages, if the plaintiff should be found entitled to them. Upon the basis of this entry, they claimed to be entitled to take a portion of the occupancy-holding at a certain period of the year, for the purpose of cultivating indigo. Held by the Full Bench that the word "khushi" used in the wajib-ul-arz indicated that the land was only to be taken with the occupancy-tenant's consent, and the document created no right of the nature alleged, namely, to take the land despite the tenant. Per TYRRELL, J.—That the suit was not maintainable under the special provisions of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). 1. FORM OF DECREE.

(a) GENERAL CASES.

1. ——— Necessity for a decree.—Act XIX of 1873 (N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act), ss. 113, 114, 115.—Omission to frame decree in case in which a question of title is decided.—Second appeal.—It is essential that in a suit under the Civil Procedure Code a decree should be drawn up. Held therefore that, in a proceeding under section 113 of the North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act, where the rights of the parties are decided, a decree should be drawn up giving effect to the decision. An Assistant Collector passed a decision under section 113 declaring the rights of the parties but did not draw up a decree giving effect to such decision. There was an appeal to the District Court from such decision, which made a decree affirming it. Held, by STUART, C. J., on second appeal, that the defect arising from the want of a decree on the record of the Court of first instance was a bar to the hearing of the second appeal, and the proceedings of the District Court should be set aside, and the case should be sent back to the Assistant Collector in order that he might frame a decree. Held, by STRAIGHT, J., that the decree of the District Court was appealable, such defect notwithstanding, and the appeal should be decreed and the decree of the District Court reversed, and the case be sent back to the Assistant Collector for the purpose aforesaid. In the schedule to his plaint he gave the boundaries of the entire lands claimed by him, but did not give any boundary between the lands claimed by him under one title and the lands claimed by him under the other title. The lower Court decreed the whole of the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court confirmed so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as declared the plaintiff's right to the first portion of the land, and dismissed his suit as to the remainder; and there being no evidence to show what lands in particular out of the whole claim were comprised in the first portion for which it gave him a decree, directed them to be ascertained in execution. Held that the decree was bad, as it should have specified the particular lands decreed. 10. ——— Refund of purchase-money.—Decree on appeal.—In reversing a decree on appeal, the Court should state the relief which they consider the appellant entitled to. A. purchased a Government revenue-paying estate from B., but on going to take possession he found C., who claimed under a putni grant, also from B., in possession. A case was therefore instituted by B. under Act IV of 1840, but it was ordered that C. should be retained in possession. A. then brought a suit against B. and C. to recover his purchase-money. No relief was asked against C., nor had C. anything to do with the sale from B. to A. The suit was dismissed. On appeal, it was ordered merely "that the decree be reversed, and the appeal decreed with costs." Nothing was asked against C. in the grounds of appeal. In execution of this decree, C.'s property was seized and sold. C. petitioned the Principal Sudder Ameen, who held that he was not liable, but on appeal the Judge held that he was liable for the purchase-money, and his property had been rightly sold in execution for it. Held, on special appeal, that C. was not liable to refund the purchase-money. 16. ——— Decree dealing only partly with case.—Allegation of fraud.—The plaint alleged fraud in the defendants in that they represented themselves as agents, when in fact they were principals, in fifty-eight instances in which they had made contracts with the plaintiffs. The prayer of the plaint was "that the defendants may either be held personally responsible on the several said contracts as purchasers thereunder, or otherwise that they may be held personally liable for damages, for fraudulently representing that they were authorized to effect the contracts aforesaid;" and further asked for an account and for damages. It appeared clear to the Judge below, on the evidence, that the defendants acted as principals, and he treated the case on the issue of fraud alone. Ten cases only of the fifty-eight were selected by the plaintiffs, on which they gave evidence of the fraud; and the Judge found in their favour as to three, and held that the plaint charging fraud, the plaintiffs could not succeed on any cause of action incidentally disclosed. The decree was drawn up with reference only to the three cases on which the fraud was found, so far as finally to dispose of them, but ordered an enquiry as to the fraud in all the rest. Held that the case was appealable, and that the decision of the Court below was right. The suit was dismissed by the first Court; but on appeal, the order was "appeal decreed." A. entered into a compromise with B., and entered satisfaction of a moiety of the decree. He afterwards issued execution of the other moiety against C. and compelled him to pay. C. now sued B. for recovery of the proportion of the amount paid by him to A., but which, according to the valuation of the respective properties, should have fallen into the share of B. Held, that the proper decree in the suit of A. against the mortgagor and B. and C. would have been a money-decree against the mortgagor only, with a declaration that the two properties were liable to be sold, clear of subsequent incumbrances, in satisfaction of the mortgage-bond debt. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that D. being puisne mortgagee, and, as such, representing the equity of redemption to the extent of his mortgage, should have had an opportunity of redeeming the mortgaged premises from R.'s mortgage, and should have been made a party to R.'s suit. He could not be deprived of his right by proceedings to which he was not a party, and was therefore entitled to a decree framed on the basis of such right of redemption. On appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court gave him a decree conditional on the payment of such larger amount within a fixed time. Held that it was not necessary to interfere with the exercise of the lower appellate Court's discretion in the matter, particularly as the defendant had not objected to such exercise in his memorandum of second appeal. Durga Prasad v. *Nawazish Ali, I. 106. ——— Rival suits to enforce the right of pre-emption.—Civil Procedure Code, s. 214.—K. and R., two co-sharers of a village, instituted separate suits in which each claimed to enforce the right of pre-emption, based on the wajib-ul-urz, in respect of the same sale of a share in a village to a stranger. The Court of first instance made the plaintiff in one suit a defendant in the other. The suits were tried together, and R. being held to have a better right under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz than K., his suit was decreed, contingent upon payment by him of the purchase-money within one month from the date of the decree. K.'s suit was dismissed absolutely. Held, that decrees in cases where two rival pre-emptors of the same degree seek to enforce pre-emption, as each necessarily must do, in respect of the whole property conveyed by one transfer, are defective if they dismiss the suit for any proportion of the property without providing for the contingency of the rival pre-emptor decree-holder omitting to enforce his decree in respect of the share decreed to him. A fortiori, where the rival decree-holders possess different degrees of pre-emption, the decree, in at least one of the rival suits, must be essentially defective if no provision is made for the contingency of the superior pre-emptor never enforcing his right. The question what should be the form of the decree in such cases can be dealt with only by exercising the vast and flexible jurisdiction possessed by the Courts of Equity in adapting their decrees to the exigencies of each case, so as to grant the actual relief required by the parties. Held, applying the principles of equity to the present case, that the Court of first instance acted rightly in adding the name of each rival pre-emptor as party defendant in the suit of the other, and in decreeing the claim of the superior pre-emptor, but that the decree in K.'s suit was defective and inequitable, inasmuch as it dismissed the suit in toto, disallowing his pre-emptive claim wholly irrespective of the contingency of H.'s omission to enforce the pre-emption decreed to him by depositing the purchase-money within time. As K. admittedly had pre-emptive right as against the vendee, his suit should have been decreed against the latter in the terms of section 214 of the Civil Procedure Code; subject, however, to the condition that the decree should not take effect, so far as the enforcement of pre-emption was concerned, in the event of R.'s enforcing the superior pre-emptive right decreed to him. (b) ACCOUNT, DECREE FOR.

115. ——— Decree for account, Nature of.—Rights of parties insufficiently defined.—Parties.—A decree for an account is not a mere direction to enquire and report. It proceeds, and must always proceed, upon the assumption that the party calling for it is entitled to the sum found due. It is a decree affirming his rights only, leaving it to be enquired into how much is due to him from the party accounting. A decree for an account of dealings and trasactions of a deceased partner in a Hindu family bank and for a dissolution of the partnership, was in this case reversed on the ground that the respective rights of the parties were not sufficiently defined and declared, and that the proper parties were not before the Court. 116. ——— Decree for account.—Amendment of clerical error in decree by Appellate Court.—The decree of the Court of first instance directed the Commissioner to take an account of the moneys paid by the plaintiff, during the period between 24th January 1865 and the date of the filing of the plaint, for the use and at the request of the defendants, and to allow credit to the defendants for the sums for which the plaintiff had given credit in his particulars of demand, and for all other sums for which the defendants should prove themselves entitled to credit, wherever the same might have become payable. The defendants, in their surcharge to the plaintiff's account, claimed credit for various payments made by them to the plaintiff between 25th January 1865 and 5th July 1865. The plaintiff claimed to appropriate these payments in satisfaction of his claim against the defendants prior to 24th January 1865. The Commissioner, by his construction of the terms of the decree, held the plaintiff entitled to make such appropriation. The Judge, in the Court of first instance, explained his decree to mean that the whole account, prior to 24th January 1865, was wiped out, and directed the Commissioner that the plaintiff was not entitled to make the appropriation he claimed. Held that the construction put by the Commissioner on the decree was right. Where the Court of first instance puts upon its own decree a construction which to the Appellate Court appears to render the decree erroneous, and the decree, on the face of it, admits of another construction, which to the Appellate Court appears to render the decree correct, the Appellate Court will adopt the latter construction. If several defendants have severed in their defence and the lower Court has specified the costs incurred by each of them, the costs payable under the above directions will be their several costs. If they have joined in their defence, or, though they have severed their defence but the lower Court has specified a single set of costs as the only costs which it will allow or treat as costs in the suit, then the costs payable will be the single set of costs. The plaintiff tendered a sum sufficient to cover the principal and interest due, but insufficient to cover costs, at a time prior to the drawing up of the Registrar's report. Held that the payment of principal and interest "hereinafter mentioned" referred to a time after the Registrar had made his report, because the sum to be paid was a sum reported to be due by the Registrar, and that, therefore, a tender made before the Registrar's report was given was not a sufficient tender to stop interest from the date of the tender. 146. ——— Decree on mortgage-bond. —Right to execution against property of judgment-debtor other than that mortgaged.—In a suit upon a bond under which certain lands were mortgaged, the decree ordered "that the amount claimed together with costs be caused to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs in this way, that the property pledged under the bond be held bound by the decree, and that the decree be realised by the sale of the pledged property," no provision being made for realisation from the other estate of the judgment-debtor in the event of the proceeds of the pledged property failing to satisfy the decree. Held that, under the circumstances, it must be presumed that the Court meant to limit the right of the plaintiff to recover to the mortgaged property, and to that alone, and that the judgment-creditor could not, in execution of his decree, proceed against the other estate of the judgment-debtor. 157. ——— Execution of conditional decree.—The decree of the original Court in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption, dated the 18th February 1879, directed that, on the deposit of the purchase-money within one month of the date on which the decree became final, the decree-holder (plaintiff) should obtain possession of the property in suit, and that, if the decree-holder failed to make such deposit within such period, the decree should become null and void. The vendee (defendant) preferred an appeal from this decree, which the Appellate Court, on the vendee's application, struck off on the 18th September 1879. Held that, assuming that the order of the Appellate Court, by reason that it did not award costs to the decree-holder (respondent), might have been made the subject of a second appeal to the High Court, inasmuch as the decree of the 18th February 1879 could not have been affected by the result of such an appeal. That decree became final on the 18th September 1879, when the appeal from it was withdrawn and struck off, and not on the expiry of one month and ninety days from the date of the Appellate Court's order of the 18th September 1879. The period specified in the decree for the payment of the purchase-money, the day on which the decree was made not being computed, expired on the 11th January following. That day was a Sunday: the plaintiff paid the purchase-money into Court on the next day, the 12th January. Held that, inasmuch as the day on which the decree was made should not be taken into account in computing the period specified in the decree for the payment of the purchase-money, nor the last day of that period, that day being a Sunday, the plaintiff had complied with the condition imposed on him by the decree. Semble,—That if the plaintiff had actually failed to deposit the purchase-money within thirty days as directed by the decree, his suit would have been liable to be dismissed, as he could not have claimed to have such period computed from the date the decree became final. 193. ——— Suit for possession of immoveable property.—List of properties sued for appended to plaint.—Omission to specify in decree properties decreed.—The plaintiff in a suit claimed possession of villages said in the plaint to be "detailed below." No details of the villages were given in the plaint itself, but a separate paper containing a list of villages was filed with the plaint. The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of "all the villages claimed," but there was no indication in the decree what those villages were. Held, that the Court executing the decree was not justified in reading the contents of the list of villages attached to the plaint into the decree, and awarding the decree-holder possession of the villages named in such list. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 206—continued.

195. ——— Order amending decree.—A District Judge, by an order passed under section 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered a decree passed by his predecessor in the terms, "I dismiss the appeal," to read "I accept the appeal," on the ground that his predecessor had obviously meant to say he accepted the appeal, and that the decree as it stood failed to give effect to the judgment. Held, on appeal under the Letters Patent, that an order passed under section 206 of the Civil Procedure Code constituted an adjudication separate from that concluded by a decree under the Code passed after the parties had been heard and evidence taken, and that the order in the present case was therefore a separate adjudication, and was not appealable under section 588. Also that, in saying that by "dismiss" his predecessor had meant "decree," the Judge had altered the decree in a manner not warranted by the terms of section 206, that he had therefore exercised his jurisdiction "illegally and with material irregularity" within the meaning of section 622 of the Code, and that the High Court was consequently competent to reverse his order. Where a Court, on the ground that the defendant was "hard pressed," directed the amount of a decree to be paid by instalments extending over ten years, and allowed only one half of the usual rate of interest,—Held that there was no "sufficient reason" for directing payment of the amount of the decree by instalments, and that such Court had exercised its discretion injuriously to the plaintiff by the length of the period over which instalments were extended, and by allowing a rate of interest less than the ordinary rate. The attachment was removed at the instance of two claimants, S. and B. In 1875 the plaintiff sued the claimants, and obtained a decree in his favour in 1878. Meanwhile, in December 1874, after the plaintiff's attachment had been removed, one V. obtained a decree against one of the brothers, P. In 1876, while the plaintiff's suit against S. and B. was pending, P.'s right, title, and interest in the one-half share of the fields belonging to himself and K. was sold in execution of V.'s decree and purchased by the defendant. In 1881 the plaintiff again attached the one-half share belonging to the two brothers under his decree of 1872. Thereupon the defendant, relying on his purchase of 1876, applied for the removal of the attachment. It was removed from P.'s one-fourth share and maintained on K.'s share, which was in due course sold. The plaintiff now sued to establish his right to sell P.'s on-

No steps were taken by the plaintiff from 1863 to revive the decree; but on the application of the defendant tendering the amount due from him, and praying to be put in possession, the lower Courts restored the decree, and passed an order in his favour. Held that the lower Courts had no jurisdiction to revive a decree at the instance of the judgment-debtor. T.* was never asserted by the plaintiff until seven years later, when he commenced the present suit. The evidence for the payment by the plaintiff of the consideration-money was so unsatisfactory that the High Court summoned him and examined him. Held that it was somewhat dangerous to allow the plaintiff, a professional man, who did not give evidence in his own suit in his own behalf, to be called for the purpose of supporting his case which had broken down; that the plaintiff's evidence as to payment of the consideration-money was very unsatisfactory and at variance with his previous deposition, and that though the mere factum of his deed was proved, it was not a bonâ fide conveyance. We are not surprised to find that the line he has elected to adopt has not met with the approval of his brother officers serving in the same province, and we have no hesitation in pronouncing his proceedings in this matter unprofessional." Held that, inasmuch as such advertisement had the effect of making such hospital a "public question," and of submitting it to the "judgment of the public," and M. had expressed himself in good faith, M. was within the third and sixth exceptions, respectively, to section 499 of the Penal Code. Held, also, that M. came within the ninth exception to that section. 18. ——— Statements in judicial proceeding.—Good faith.—Privileged communication.—The law of defamation which should be applied in suits in India for defamation is that laid down in the Penal Code, and not the English law of libel and slander. Held, therefore, that defamatory statements are not privileged merely because they are used in a petition preferred in a judicial proceeding. It is not essential that, before a person can be held entitled to the privilege of having made a statement in good faith for the protection of his interests, he should establish that every word he has spoken or written is literally true. If, having regard to facts and circumstances within his knowledge, he might, as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent man, have drawn the conclusions which he has expressed in defamatory language for the protection of his own interests, he may fairly be held to have made out his good faith. The Magistrate found that it was literally true that the complainant had been sent to be prosecuted, but that it was also true that the prosecution had, to the accused's knowledge, been ordered to be withdrawn by the District Judge. Held that, although the statement contained only the truth, it was incomplete and misleading; and that, as the accused was well aware that the prosecution referred to had been withdrawn, and did not injuriously affect the complainant's character, he could not plead that the imputation made by him on the complainant's character was made in good faith, or for the public good. the complainant, who was a judicial officer, of (i) having, upon a particular occasion, used abusive language to certain respectable native litigants appearing before him in Court, and (ii) having, upon other occasions not specified, treated other respectable natives (not named) "in a similar manner." This latter accusation was contained in a postscript. The complaint filed by the complainant in the Court of the committing Magistrate, and the charge sheet in which the Magistrate committed the defendant for trial, covered the whole of the document complained of except the postscript. At the trial of the case the defendant pleaded not guilty, and also relied on the first, eighth, and ninth exceptions to section 499 of the Penal Code. The prosecution gave evidence to prove that, in making the charges contained in the alleged libel, the defendant was actuated by express malice toward the complainant. Held, with reference to the terms of section 499 of the Penal Code, that evidence of particular instances of abusive language applied by the complainant upon former occasions to natives appearing in his Court was admissible, first, as relating to the question what was the reputation which the defendant was said to have injured, and, secondly, because it must be gathered from the document complained of as a whole whether it showed a malicious intention or not. During the hearing of the case the accused informed the Subordinate Judge that the complainant was "tampering with the witnesses," and prayed that the complainant might be made to sit in the Court. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge directed the complainant to sit in the Court. The complainant thereupon lodged a complaint against the accused before a First Class Magistrate, charging the accused with having defamed him. The Magistrate convicted the accused of the offence, and inflicted upon him a fine of R25, or, in default, sentenced him to one month's simple imprisonment. The accused made an application to the Sessions Judge at Thana to call for the record of his case, and, if he thought proper, to make a reference to the High Court. The Sessions Judge, having called for the record and examined it, was of opinion that as no malice or bad faith appeared on the part of the accused in making the imputation, the case of the accused fell within exception 9 of section 499 of the Penal Code, and that the accused had committed no offence. ——— XVII of 1879, XXIII of 1881, and XXII of 1882.—Agriculturist, Definition of.—Change of definition between date of filing of suit and date of trial.—Jurisdiction.—Some time previously to the institution of this suit the defendants lived and carried on business as money-lenders at Yeola, a talooka not subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and while there they became indebted to the plaintiff. Subsequently they removed to Kopargaon, in which district the said Act was in force. Both at Yeola and at Kopargaon they, in the course of their business, acquired land which they cultivated. In 1882, the plaintiff brought this suit against them in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Yeola to recover the debt due to him. The defendants contended that they were agriculturists, and could not be sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Yeola. The suit came on for trial in July 1883, at which date Act XXII of 1882 had come into force, which altered the definition of "agriculturist." The Subordinate Judge held that the defendants were agriculturists, and that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. His decree was reversed by the District Judge, who held that the defendants earned their livelihood only partially, and not principally, from agriculture, and that the lower Court had jurisdiction. The defendants appealed to the High Court, and contended that the definition of "agriculturist" to be applied in the case was that contained in Act XXIII of 1881, which was in force when the suit was instituted, and not that in Act XXII of 1882, which was in force at the date of the trial. Held that, having regard to the very special nature of the legislation embodied in section 12 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) for the benefit of a particular and very limited class, it was intended by the Legislature that a person claiming the benefit of that section at the trial should fill the character of an agriculturist as then defined by law. the local limits of whose jurisdiction he or they reside. The Court must necessarily be in some one of the said four districts. The word "agriculturist" as defined in section 2, clause 2, refers to an agriculturist residing within any one of the said four districts only, and not to one residing in any other district. On the 25th February 1879, a suit was filed for R85 in the Small Cause Court at Nadiad, in the district of Ahmedabad, against two defendants, one of whom was an agriculturist residing within the local limits of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Umreth, and not within those of the Small Cause Court at Nadiad. The Judge was of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to try it under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and referred the case for the opinion of the High Court. Held, that the Act did not affect the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court in the case of a defendant who was an agriculturist and resided in a place in the district of Ahmedabad, and not in any one of the four districts mentioned in the Act. In computing the period of limitation for such a suit, the time intervening between the application to the Conciliator and the grant of a certificate by him must be excluded. British India as to suits brought against agriculturists of the description given in section 2. In a suit against defendants, who were residents at Sholapur, for R1,947, the price of goods sold and delivered, the defendants moved for a postponement of the hearing in order that a commission might issue to take evidence at Sholapur, alleging that by the evidence thus obtained they would be proved to be agriculturists within the meaning of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Act, and consequently under section 11 could only be sued at Sholapur. The Court granted the commission, holding that if the defendants established that they were bonâ fide agriculturists they were exempt from the jurisdiction of the High Court. The rule of law that the right to redeem is co-extensive with the right to foreclosure, and is consequently postponed until the time fixed for the payment of the mortgage-debt, does not apply to cases falling under that Act. 2. ——— Mortgagee overpaid.—Decree.—Suit for account and redemption.—In a suit for account and redemption, if the mortgagee on taking the accounts, is found to have been overpaid, the general practice is to order the payment, by him, of the balance due to the mortgagor, with interest from the date of the institution of the suit. The application of the above rule, however, in redemption suits instituted under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), in cases where the terms of the mortgage contract between the parties are set aside for the purpose of taking the account under the provisions of section 13 of the Act, would not only lead to the redemption of the mortgaged property, contrary to the terms and conditions of the contract, but would in many cases oblige the mortgagee to refund the money which rightly came into his hands under the contract. The plaintiff, an agriculturist, sued (as mortgagor) for account and redemption of the mortgaged property under the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The defendant pleaded that, by the terms of the mortgage-bond, he was not bound to account, and that section 12 of the Act did not apply.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection, and on taking the account, found a balance due from the defendant to the plaintiff. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the land and the amount. The District Judge confirmed the decree of the first Court. Held, that the decree of the lower Court must be varied by omitting the direction ordering the defendant to pay the balance to the plaintiff. ——— ss. 12 & 15.—Suit on bond the execution of which is admitted.—Consideration.—Burden of proof.—Practice.—Procedure.—In cases to which the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) applies, where a suit is brought upon a bond the execution of which is admitted by the defendant, no strict rule can be laid down as to the party upon whom the burden of proof rests. If the parties adduce no evidence, the Court must be content with the evidence of the parties themselves, and endeavour, in the language of section 15 of the Act, to "satisfy itself." If it cannot "satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal or interest, or both," it may, under that section, direct, of its own motion, that such amount be ascertained by arbitration. Although proviso 2 of section 92, and section 102 of the Evidence Act I of 1872, which correspond with clause 1 of Regulation V of 1827, have not been repealed, the intention of the Legislature in enacting the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) clearly was to relieve the debtor from the necessity of proving failure of consideration, although admitted in the bond on which he is sued, and the execution of which he admits. He failed to pay within the time fixed; and afterwards applied, under section 15 (B) of the Act as amended by Act XXII of 1882, to be allowed to pay the amount of the decree

An order for foreclosure when the time appointed by the order has expired, itself operates to transfer the ownership; and the ownership having once passed to the mortgagee, cannot be taken away from him by a subsequent order not founded on any new transaction of the parties, except on some special ground, such as fraud or inevitable accident. The effect of that section must be taken to be an enlargement of the indulgence granted by section 210 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), but only in those cases to which the latter section applies. By section 210 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court may, after the passing of a decree in money-suits, order the amount to be paid by instalments, provided the decree-holder consents. By section 20 of Act XVII of 1879 the Court may make the same order in similar suits, without the consent of the decree-holder. In the case of a debt secured by a mortgage, the agriculturist's remedy lies in a suit, not for an account, but for redemption; and the only decree which can be made in such a suit, in the absence of any special provision in the Act, is the ordinary decree for payment of the whole amount within six months, or, in default, for foreclosure. Hurdeo Das v. *Hukam Sing, I. By subsequent endorsements it came ultimately to B. & Co., who, as above mentioned, got delivery of the cotton from the plaintiff on payment of R191 per candy. The plaintiff, who had sold to the defendants at R200 per candy and who received from B. & Co. only R191 per candy, sued the defendants in the Small Cause Court for the difference. The defendants contended that after the receipt of the letter written by them to the plaintiff he was bound not to deliver the cotton to L. & Co., or to any subsequent endorsee of the delivery order, until he had obtained payment of the full price (R200 per candy) which the defendants had agreed to pay him for it; that the delivery to B. & Co. was not a delivery authorised by the defendants; that the payment made by B. & Co. to the plaintiff was not a payment made by, or on behalf of, the defendants; that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, against the defendants was for the full price of the cotton; and that as that exceeded R2,000 the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction. Held that the defendants' letter to the plaintiff was ineffectual to control or alter the course of the delivery order, and that the plaintiff was bound to deliver the cotton to B. & Co. on payment by them of the price of ₹191 per candy. The defendants having re-purchased the cotton after it had passed through several hands, sold it for ₹191 per candy to H., from whom it ultimately passed to B. & Co. The plaintiff's lien, therefore, as regarded H. and his sub-vendees, was confined to the price at the above rate, and B. & Co. were entitled to the goods as against the defendants on payment of that price. The defendants' letter, therefore, of the 20th April 1883—however the plaintiff might have been bound to act on it as regarded L. & Co., to whom the cotton was sold at ₹202 per candy, and the other sub-vendees prior to the re-purchase by the defendants—could only, as regards subsequent purchasers, prevent delivery to them before payment of the price at which the defendants had re-sold the goods, viz., ₹191 per candy. That price was actually paid to the plaintiff before he did deliver the goods, and credit was given to the defendants in the account. By the English common law a delivery order is regarded as a mere token of authority to deliver; and before the wharfinger has attorned, it does not, independently of statute or custom, enable the purchaser to confer a title upon a vendee or a sub-vendee free from the vendor's lien for the price. The Contract Act (IX of 1872) gives no larger effect, except by section 108, to a delivery order than it had by English common law, and under that Act (section 90, illustration (c), and sections 95 and 98) the giving of a delivery order by a vendor to a vendee does not of itself give the vendee such a possession of the goods as to defeat the vendor's lien. The exception to this rule contained in exception (1) to section 108, which provides that a seller may give to a buyer a better title than he had himself where he is, by consent of the owner, in possession of the goods or documents relating thereto, cannot be held to apply to cases where the possession is entirely beyond the control of the owner. DEMURRAGE.

——— Delay caused by inability of captain to deliver goods.—Where a purchaser engaged to take delivery of cargo from a ship at a certain rate per diem, and, in the event of failure, to pay demurrage, and the contract contained a stipulation in the following terms: "But should the captain be unable to deliver weighment of the goods on account of the lightness of the vessel to which I have no objection, but would not hold myself liable for any demurrage,"—Held that, according to a reasonable construction of the contract, if delay took place in unloading, demurrage was to cease so long as the delay was caused by the inability of the captain to deliver the goods; not that the matter was to be thereby set at large, and that there was no longer to be any period under the contract within which delivery was to be taken of the cargo. 1. ——— Equitable mortgage.—Security.—Lien.—The firm of C. N. & Co. should keep in the Bank a certain fixed cash balance. In November, R., finding that the limit of the discount accommodation had been exceeded, and the cash account overdrawn, declined to discount any more bills unless security were given for the amount then due to the Bank. A., the only partner in the firm of C. N. & Co. carried on their business; and in consideration of such promise, R. discounted further bills from 24th to 29th November. A. sent to R. a letter on 25th November as follows: "In pursuance of the conversation the writer had with you yesterday, we now deposit the title-deeds of landed house property as security against our discount account." The letter enclosed certain title-deeds, of which R. acknowledged the receipt. R. subsequently discovered they were not the title-deeds which A. had promised to deposit, and of this he gave A. notice by letter on 28th November. *C. In a suit on the basis of the documents for foreclosure, or for sale of the property, or in the alternative for a conveyance of the legal estate,—Held that the letter itself was not a contract of mortgage, and was without registration admissible in evidence of the equitable mortgage which had been completed upon deposit of title-deeds. Held, also, that the existence of the letter would not prevent the plaintiff from giving any other evidence in proof of his claim. Kedar Nath Dutt v. *Sham Lall Khettry, 11 B. 6. ——————— Legal mortgage unregistered.—Claim by mortgagee, who has failed to register mortgage-deed, to have an equitable mortgage by virtue of deposit of title-deeds previously to execution of mortgage-deed.—The plaintiff having consented to lend R10,000 to the defendant, the latter deposited with him, on the 2nd April 1883, the title-deeds of a certain property. On receiving them the plaintiff told the defendant that he would take them to his attorney, have a deed drawn up, and then advance the money. The defendant applied to the plaintiff for the money before the deed was prepared, but the plaintiff refused, saying he would not advance the money until he was satisfied by his attorney, and the deed had been prepared. At the time the deeds were handed over to the plaintiff (i.e., the 2nd April 1885), there was no existing debt due by the defendant to the plaintiff. On the 6th April 1885, the mortgage-deed was executed, and on the same day the money was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant. The plaintiff stated that he "had advanced the money on the security of the title-deeds on the same day." He did not say how long before the execution of the deed the money had been paid, but the deed itself recited that the R10,000 were paid immediately before the execution of the mortgage. The mortgage-deed was not registered. The plaintiff stated that he knew that it required registration, but that it was left unregistered at the request of the defendant, who did not wish to be "exposed in the eyes of the public." The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to an equitable mortgage upon the said property, and for the sale thereof, in default of the payment of the mortgage-debt. He contended that the loan had been made on the security of the title-deeds which had been deposited on the 2nd April; that he had, no doubt, intended to obtain a legal mortgage, but that he had abandoned that intention by consenting to leave the mortgage-deed unregistered, and had on the 6th April elected to rely upon his equitable mortgage. Held that the plaintiff had no equitable mortgage. At the time when the deeds were deposited, there was no antecedent or existing debt, nor was any oral agreement made that the title-deeds should stand as a security for future advances, nor was any advance, in fact, made until the mortgage-deed was about to be executed. There could be no doubt that if the defendant had not been ready to execute the deed, no advance would have been made. The money was really advanced on the security of the mortgage-deed, though, at the time the money was advanced, the plaintiff had the title-deeds in his possession. The purchaser, on the faith of this, advanced large sums and paid off a mortgage on muttah T. This latter muttah having been sold, S. brought a suit to recover the amount advanced by him on account of that muttah, claiming to be equitable mortgagee, and to have a charge on that estate for the advances made by him in respect thereof. Held that the transaction created a lien, and bound the muttah T. for the advances made by S. Semble,—by the Mahomedan law such a deposit for a security in respect of a contingent loss would be in the nature of a trust, not a power. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872, which came into force on the 1st day of January 1873, the Deputy Commissioner was no longer a Court of Session, but received powers under section 36 to try, as a Magistrate, classes of cases which formerly he would have tried as a Court of Session. The Deputy Commissioner, disregarding the commitment, took the case up afresh as a Magistrate of the district under section 36. Held that this was clearly illegal, and that the Magistrate was bound to have sent the commitment on to the proper Court, and had no power, a trial being in progress, to commence a new enquiry in the same matter against the prisoner. DISCHARGE OF ACCUSED.—Effect of discharge—continued.

Magistrate tried and acquitted a person accused of an offence without preparing in writing a charge against him. Such omission did not occasion any failure of justice. Held, with reference to section 216 of Act X of 1872, explanation 1, that such omission did not invalidate the order of acquittal of such person and render such order equivalent to an order of discharge, and such order was a bar to the revival of the prosecution of such person for the same offence. 25. ——— Revival of prosecution.—Place of enquiry or trial.—Enticing away married woman.—A person was prosecuted before a Criminal Court in the Punjab for enticing away a married woman, with a criminal intent, an offence punishable under section 498 of the Penal Code. Such prosecution was legally instituted in such Court and such offence was properly triable by it. Such Court discharged such person under the provisions of section 215 of Act X of 1872. Subsequently it appeared that such person was detaining such woman at a place in the North-Western Provinces, and he was prosecuted before a Criminal Court of the district in which such place was situated for the same offence as he had been prosecuted for before the Criminal Court in the Punjab, viz., enticing away such married woman, and was convicted of that offence. Held that, although his previous discharge did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence, such prosecution could only be revived in the Punjab Court, and he could not be convicted under the latter part of section 498 of the Penal Code for detaining an enticed woman until the enticing had been proved, and such conviction had been properly set aside by the Court of Session. 5. ——— European British subjects.—Jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay to hear a suit for divorce arising in a Native State between European British subjects.—Legislative powers of Governor General.— The petitioner, a European British subject resident at Secunderabad in the Dekkan, sued for a divorce, alleging against the respondent various acts of adultery committed at Secunderabad. Held that the High Court of Bombay had jurisdiction to try the suit under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act IV of 1869. Held, also, that the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869, apply to suits between European British subjects resident in Native States in India; and that section 2 of that Act, which extends those provisions to such persons, was not ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. Statute 28 and 29 Victoria, cap. 15, section 3, transferred to the Governor General in Council the power, previously vested in Her Majesty by section 18 of the High Courts Act (Statute 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 104) to alter and determine the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the High Courts in India. The power thus transferred was a power "by Order" to authorise the exercise of jurisdiction. But the power so conferred upon the Governor General in Council did not affect the general legislative powers as to matters of jurisdiction previously possessed by him under Statute 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 67, section 22. Those powers were (section 6 of Statute 28 and 29 Victoria, cap. 15) expressly reserved; and the special power given by section 3 of altering the limits of the jurisdiction by executive order does not exclude by implication the general legislative powers. an alteration of such jurisdiction by Act instead of by Order is still within the general scope of the legislative powers of the Governor General in Council, although the more convenient course of an executive Government notification is usually followed. Previously to the institution of the present suit the respondent had left India and gone to England without any intention of returning to India. It was contended that Act IV of 1869, passed by the Indian Legislature in exercise of its power to make laws for persons resident in Native territories, could not affect her. Held that the petition satisfied the Act by alleging residence of the petitioner in India and the commission of the act of adultery whilst the parties last resided together in India. It was not necessary to show the residence of the respondent. THORNTON v. THORNTON . I. L. R., 10 Bom., 422

——— s. 3, cl. 9, and s. 10.—Desertion.—Adultery.—Judicial separation.— A husband and wife living in British Burma separated in 1861; the wife, for reasons of convenience, going to England, but with no intention of a permanent separation. After her departure the husband contracted an adulterous connection with a Burmese woman, which was, however, unknown to the wife till 1875. During the separation he kept up correspondence with his wife, and in some of his letters he expressed an intention of never returning to England; and in 1868 expressed his willingness to aid her in obtaining a divorce. The wife never openly consented to the separation, although she could not be said to have made any active opposition to it. Held that the wife was not entitled to a divorce, but only to a judicial separation, as there was no evidence of desertion. Desertion under the Indian Divorce Act implies "an abandonment against the wish of the person charging it," and although the word "abandonment" is undefined, the effect of the clause is to introduce into the Indian Statute the view adopted by the Courts in England in construing the English Act. The expression "against the wish of" is to be construed as meaning contrary to an actively expressed wish of the person charging abandonment, and notwithstanding the resistance or opposition of such person. A wife is bound, when seeking to prove desertion, to give evidence of conduct on her part, showing unmistakeably that such desertion was against her will. The decisions of the Probate and Divorce Courts in England must be taken to be a guide to the Courts in India under the Indian Divorce Act, except when the facts of any particular case, arising out of the peculiar circumstances of Anglo-Indian life, constitute a situation such as the English Courts are not likely to have had in view. On the 26th February 1886 he filed his petition in the High Court of Bombay. On the 26th March 1886 the respondent filed a suit against the petitioner in the High Court of Justice in England for restitution of conjugal rights. Where the respondent was living, not a life of promiscuous intercourse with all who sought her, but living with separate persons in succession, and professed to be able to attribute her respective children to a father, she was held not to be leading a life of prostitution within the meaning of the Act. Where a petitioner neglected for fourteen years to take any steps to obtain a separation from his wife, whom he knew to be living in adultery, the Court refused to allow the petition to be amended by the addition of co-respondents. The adultery was admitted, but the respondent proved that her husband had been guilty of various acts of cruelty towards her, which disentitled him to have an unconditional divorce, and claimed on this ground a right to a judicial separation with alimony, under section 15 of the Indian Divorce Act. She was at the time of the suit living with the co-respondent. Held that the respondent was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation with alimony. The Court has discretion, under section 14 of the Act, to refuse a decree for divorce if the petitioner has been guilty of cruelty, although the cruelty may have been condoned. granting or refusing a decree of dissolution of marriage given by section 14 of the Indian Divorce Act, the principles laid down in the English decisions with regard to the corresponding section in the English Act (20 and 21 Victoria, cap. 85, section 31). The discretion to be exercised under section 14 of the Indian Divorce Act must be a regulated discretion. The Court cannot grant or withhold a divorce on the mere footing that the petitioner's adultery is more or less pardonable, or that it has been more or less frequent. There must be special circumstances attending the commission of such adultery, or special features placing it in some category capable of distinct statement and recognition, in order that the discretion may be fitly exercised in favour of a petitioner. G—— v. G—— . . . 8 Bom., O. C., 48

6. ——— Desertion.—In a suit by a wife for a dissolution of her marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion, the adultery was proved, and it was found that the wife, notwithstanding the gross misconduct of her husband, continued to live with him for some years, during which time she supported her husband and herself by her own earnings, he contributing nothing to her support; that eventually, under the pressure of pecuniary difficulties, brought about by her husband's extravagance and dissolute habits, they came to an arrangement by which she went to live with her friends and he resided at his mother's house, until they could again find means to provide a common house; that for two years previously to the separation, though they had lived together, no conjugal intercourse owing to the husband's misconduct had taken place between them; that he left his mother's house without telling his wife where he was going, and subsequently went to Madras, where he had since resided. Held in the Court below, following the case of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, L. R., 1 P. and D., 694, that the separation having originally been by mutual consent, desertion could not take place until cohabitation had been resumed; desertion not being proved, the wife was only entitled to a decree for judicial separation. Held on appeal that the separation not being brought about by the act of the wife, but by the husband's misconduct, distinguished the case from that of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, and that, under the circumstances, the desertion was proved, and the petitioner was entitled to a decree for a dissolution of marriage. 7. ——— Delay.—Connivance.—Whilst on the one hand there is no absolute limitation in the case of a petition for dissolution of marriage, yet the first thing which the Court looks to when the charge of adultery is preferred, is, whether there has been such delay as to lead to the conclusion that the petitioner had either connived at the adultery or was wholly indifferent to it; but any presumption arising from apparent delay may always be rebutted by an explanation of the circumstances. 8. ——— Suit for divorce for adultery.—Delay in bringing suit.—Evidence of connivance.—The marriage took place in 1860, the adultery commenced almost simultaneously with the marriage. The relief was sought in 1872. Held that, as until 1869 there was no means of obtaining relief, the question was whether the delay since that time had been sufficiently accounted for. Petitioner's excuse was that he believed that after seven years he could contract a second marriage. Held, also, that the delay ought not to be construed into an insensibility to the injury sustained, and the other circumstances of the case rebutted the existence of indifference approaching to connivance. The respondent entered an appearance through a solicitor, but did not file any written statement, and did not appear at the hearing, and a decree was made for the petitioner on the 26th July 1881. On the 3rd October, T., who had acted as solicitor for the respondent, appeared as intervenor, and under section 16 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) obtained a rule nisi calling on the petitioner to show cause why a new trial should not be had and all further proceedings under the decree nisi should not be stayed. The rule was obtained upon an affidavit of T. in which he stated that since the date of the decree nisi he had been informed by the respondent that the petitioner had been, prior to that date, guilty of adultery with a person whose name he mentioned; that he was informed by the respondent that the reason why he (the respondent) had not defended the suit was that he wished to avoid making public the fact of his wife's adultery, and thus injuring the prospects of his children; that application had been made both to the Advocate General of Bombay and to the Government Solicitor that they should intervene as representing the Queen's Proctor in India, but that both had declined. The respondent also filed an affidavit corroborating the statements made in T.'s affidavit. In showing cause against the rule it was contended on behalf of the petitioner that, under the Divorce Act (IV of 1869), the proper course for a third person wishing to intervene was to file an appearance, and then to show cause on the motion to make absolute the decree nisi, and that the rule for a new trial was wrong in form. Held that a new trial could not be granted, there being no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) for the granting of a new trial. The respondent himself could only have applied for a review of judgment under section 623, and even if otherwise entitled to a review, the motion of the 23rd October 1881, regarded as an application for a review, was too late under clause 162, schedule II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. Assuming that a third person had the right to apply for a review of judgment, T.'s application of 3rd October 1881 was also barred. Held also that, under the Divorce Act (IV of 1869), a third person may show cause against a decree nisi being made absolute, but is not at liberty to institute proceedings, e.g., by obtaining a rule, as was done in this case. Held also that T., who had been the solicitor to the respondent, and who was, in fact, acting at the instance of the respondent, was not entitled to intervene or to show cause against the decree being made absolute. A respondent has no right to show cause, and he cannot do indirectly through another what he is not permitted to do himself. Counsel on behalf of the petitioner subsequently moved to make the decree nisi absolute, and contended that the Court having held that T. had no right to intervene or to show cause, the affidavits filed by him should be disregarded and taken off the file, and that no cause having been shown by any other person, the petitioner was entitled, under the provisions of section 16 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869), to have the decree made absolute. The Court, however, refused the motion, and adjourned the case, directing that the petitioner should attend personally on a day specified, in order that the matters alleged in the affidavits might be investigated. The defence to the suit was that a previous marriage had, on 6th December 1871, been performed between the respondent and the petitioner's sister, and the respondent prayed that the second marriage might be declared a nullity. The ceremony of 6th December 1871 had taken place while the petitioner's sister was on her death-bed, and in extremis, and had been celebrated in accordance with the rites of the Roman Catholic Church, and it was held both by the original Court and on appeal to be a valid marriage. The first Court (CUNNINGHAM, J.) held that the second marriage was null and void on the ground that the parties were within the prohibited degrees. Held by the Full Bench,—The prohibited degrees mentioned in section 19 of the Divorce Act do not necessarily mean the degrees prohibited by the law of England. All that was known in respect of the parties to the marriage being that they were Roman Catholic subjects with Portuguese names, and it not having been found whether they were of English or any other European descent, or of native or mixed parentag,—Held that the prohibited degrees for the parties to the marriage were not the degrees prohibited by the law of England, but those prohibited by the customary law of the class to which they belonged,—that is to say, the law of the Roman Catholic Church as applied in this country. The principle upon which the Divorce Court in England acts, in requiring the husband, in a suit for judicial separation, to provide for his wife's costs, is based upon the absolute right which the law formerly gave the husband upon marriage to the whole of his wife's personal estate, and to the income of her real estate, leaving her destitute of all means to conduct her case; but this state of the law has been completely altered in India by section 4 of the Succession Act, which prevents any person from acquiring, or losing, rights in respect of property by marriage. DIVORCE ACT (IV OF 1869), s. 45—continued.

——— ss. 51 and 52.—Suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of wife's adultery.—Evidence of adultery. — Co-respondent. — The co-respondent, in a suit by a husband for the dissolution of his marriage with his wife on the ground of adultery, was summoned by the petitioner in such suit as a witness. The Court did not explain to him, before he was sworn, that it was not compulsory upon, but optional with, him to give evidence or not. He did not object to be sworn, and replied to the questions asked him by the petitioner's counsel without hesitation, until he was asked whether he had had sexual intercourse with the respondent. He then asked the Court whether he was bound to answer such question. The Court told him that he was bound to do so, and he accordingly answered such question, answering it in the affirmative. Had the Court not told him that he was bound to answer such question, he would have declined to answer it. Held, under such circumstances, that the co-respondent had not "offered" to give evidence within the meaning of section 51 of the Divorce Act, 1869, and therefore his evidence was not admissible. ——— s. 52.—Witness.—The respondent in a suit for divorce under Act IV of 1869 can be examined as a witness. By the 52nd section she may be compelled to give evidence in the cases there supposed. In other cases her evidence is admissible if she offers herself as a witness. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS . . . 3 B. L. R., Ap., 6

1. ——— s. 55.—Right of co-respondent to be heard on appeal.—A husband brought a suit for divorce against his wife on the ground of her adultery; the co-respondent appeared in that suit. The respondent appealed on the ground (inter alia) that on the evidence the Court ought to have held that the adultery was not proved. Held that, in that appeal, the co-respondent was not entitled to be heard in opposition to the appeal. KELLY v. KELLY AND SAUNDERS . . . . 5 B. L. R., 71

2. ——— Appeal by a wife from order made in suit for divorce.—Wife's costs.—Security for costs.—Memorandum of appeal admitted without requiring security.—In a suit for divorce brought by a wife against her husband, the wife obtained a decree nisi which ordered the respondent to pay a monthly sum by way of alimony to the wife, and also ordered him to pay the wife's costs of suit. Under this decree a sum of R3,369 was due to the wife on the 26th May 1882. The wife appealed from an order made in the suit, and the Court, under the circumstances, admitted the appeal without requiring from the appellant the usual security for costs. KING v. KING . . . . 3. ——— Appeal.—Production of additional evidence in Appellate Court.—At the hearing of an appeal from a decree dismissing a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of her husband's incestuous adultery with her sister M. and cruelty, the appellant produced certain letters written by the respondent and M. to each other which showed that a criminal intimacy existed between them. These letters were not written until after the appellant had filed the appeal. Held that such letters were admissible and should be admitted, and that, having been brought to the Court's notice by the appellant's counsel, the Court was bound in the interests of justice to require their production in order to enable it to decide the appeal on its real merits. ——— Will.—Probate, Application for.—Service under E. I. Company, 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106.—Succession Act, ss. 5 and 10.—A Scotchman, who entered into the service of the East India Company, and continued in that service after the Act of 1858 (21 and 22 Victoria, cap. 106), transferring the Government of India from the East India Company to the Crown, was passed, died in the year 1878, leaving a holograph will which was not attested according to the provisions of the Succession Act, but which was admittedly good according to Scotch law. Held, upon an application for a declaration that the document was a good will, and for a grant of probate, that the deceased had acquired an Anglo-Indian domicile, which he had not lost at the time of his death, notwithstanding the Act of 1858 and the Succession Act, and therefore, the will not having been properly executed, probate was refused. 1. ——— Suit to set aside deed.—Restoration of advantage accruing to plaintiff under deed.—Where one seeks to set aside a deed on account of duress, and such duress does not amount to personal duress, but merely to pressure by threats as of injury to property, the plaintiff must offer to restore any benefit accruing to him under the deed. 2. ——— Contract made under threat of Criminal offence.—In a suit to enforce performance of a contract, where defendant pleads that the contract was executed under compulsion and intimidation, it is not sufficient for him to prove that it was executed from fear of a criminal complaint, as that might have been a righteous fear, and not simply a bodily fear imposed on him, in order to his doing that which he would not of his own free will have done. 3. ——— Avoidance of contract.—Imprisonment.—An agent employed by the plaintiff to purchase timber for him in the Siamese territory was imprisoned by an officer of the Siamese Government, on a charge brought against him by the defendant of stealing timber. In order to obtain his release he contracted to purchase from the defendant, for the plaintiff, the timber which he was charged with stealing, at a price much beyond its value. Held that the plaintiff might repudiate the contract as obtained under duress. In England the mere fact of imprisonment is not deemed sufficient to avoid an agreement made by one who is in lawful custody under the regular process of a Court of competent jurisdiction where no undue advantage is taken of the situation of the party making the agreement. But in a country in which there is no settled system of law or procedure, and where the Judge is invested with arbitrary powers, imprisonment may in itself amount to duress such as will avoid a contract entered into by the prisoner with a view of obtaining release. 4. ——— Suit to set aside agreement made under threat of criminal prosecution for which there was no foundation.—Right of suit.—The plaintiff under threat of a criminal prosecution for the offence of criminal trespass, executed an agreement in writing which conferred certain rights on the defendant. There was no foundation for the charge made by the defendant. In a suit to set aside the agreement,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit. DUTIES.

1. ——— Levy of duties.—Haq.—Act XIX of 1844 (Levy of Haqs, Bombay), Act XX of 1859 (Town Duties, Bombay).—Abolition of duties and haqs.—Held (TUCKER, J., dissentiente) that all town duties, taxes, and cesses of every kind on trades or professions (and not merely such of them as were then levied by Government) were abolished by Act XIX of 1844, and that a privilege enjoyed by a private person to levy certain fees on articles imported and exported through three of the city gates of Surat, and originating in an alienation by a former sovereign of a portion of the royal revenues derivable from that source, ceased from the date when the said Act came into operation; and consequently that the Court was not precluded from so deciding, because the provisions of Act XX of 1839 (empowering the Governor in Council of Bombay to prohibit the levy of haqs and fees) had not been complied with in forbidding the levy of the fees in question. Per COUCH, J.—The intention of the Legislature in 1844 appears, from the language used by it in Act XIX, and from the recital in Act XVI of that year, to have been the import on salt being about to be increased, that, instead of leaving haqs such as this to be abolished at different times under the Act of 1839, they were then to be entirely abolished. 2. ——— Toda garas haq.—Alienation of haq.—Bombay Act VII of 1863, ss. 27, 32.—Held, in the absence of proof on the part of Government to the contrary, that there is nothing in the nature of a toda garas payment which makes it incapable of alienation; and that without such proof Government receiving such sums cannot withhold payment of them from the alienee of the person to whom, but for the alienation, they would be paid. Held, also, that toda garas haq does not come within the meaning of the word "lands" as defined by section 32 of Bombay Act VII of 1863, and that a suit having reference to the recovery of sums due out of such haq is not affected by section 27 of that Act. 3. ——— Amount collected, Payment of.—Onus probandi.—Held that whatever may be the right of the Government as to the collection of toda garas from villagers, where it does collect toda garas it is bound to pay over the amount so collected to the original garashia, or his representatives if the haq is a perpetual one. Where Government has paid a toda garas haq to a garashia for a long and uninterrupted period of time, the onus of proving that the haq is not perpetual lies upon Government.
